

THE WIDOW LEEDON'S LAST LEAF.

through wanted, none appeared more acceptably to "Him who sits on the green, while others..."

But other eyes than the All-seeing were looking at those who were looking at the widow Leedon...

It was evening—a beautiful autumn evening. The red leaves were falling...

She had no eyes for the glory of that superb October sunset as she sat wearily on...

As she entered the village she seemed almost to enter a new world...

Mr. Carrington, District Attorney, opened his eyes and said he was not surprised that the counsel for the widow Leedon...

It was a solemn scene. The jury have before them a dying man, who has forfeited his life by the commission of a crime...

Years after the boy had left her, when Robert Leedon came to see her in her loneliness, and ventured to tell her at length...
