FARRAGUT IN PARIS. "In-vice Paris" in Naval Style---Ex-amination of Instruments of War by th. Adv. Irai--- The Public Cool Towards Americans---Driftol Feeling concerning Moxico---General Dix's encerning Moxico---General Dix's Entertainment. (From the New York Heraid.) PARIS, July 26, 1867.---My last letter concluded with the announcement that Admiral Farragut, fanked by several members of his' staff, was quietly inspecting the prominent objects of in-tervet in and around this gay centre of the world. Since then I have to chronicle a "little more of the same sort," for it seems to be the determina-tion of our naval hero to accomplish as much as possible during his brief solourn in the capital; and all Americans know full well that when he makes up his mind to do anything, all the obstacles in the world will not prevent him from making the attempt. Those who acall the obstacles in the world will not prevent him from making the attempt. Those who ac-company the Admiral in his tours of observation bear full and ample testimony to the fact that he has a most inquiring mind, for he never passes a work of mechanism without knowing the full value of its construction and power, and seldom permits the simplest invention to escape his observation. As may be readily imagined, all the improvements in military and naval engineering, and everything relating to the science of gunnery and the defeace of fortifications, seem to have a wonderful charm for him, and cause him to linger long in their inspection.

One would be justified in supposing that a man • who had been exposed to every danger from "villainous saltpetre," and who had withstood unnerved the bursting around him of every ex-plosive known in modern warfare, would be very willing to pass by all such disagreeable evidences of the destructive power of the times; but not so with the Admiral. He still admires the conical shaped shell of some new gun with the liveliest shaped shell of some new gun with the liveliest shaped shell of some new gun with the liveliest interest, and critically inspects the last immenae mass of iron, yclept a cannon, which is pro-nounced by its constructor as having sufficient explosive power to breach any wall in Christen-dom. One of these Beautiful toys is now on ex-hibition in the Great Exposition. It was cast in Prussia, and brought to Paris on a car made expressly for its transportation. It weighs over one hundred thousand pounds, and throws a ball the very appearance of which is sufficient to produce a most frightful nightmare. As I gazed with mingled feelings of awe and admiration upon this immense mass of metal, and then obwith mingled feelings of awe and admiration upon this immense mass of metal, and then ob-ecryed some French soldiers mentally measuring its powers of destruction, I could not resist some little curlosity to know how soon the two Powers thus represented would be using the very instru-ment over which one was exulting and the other, perhaps, congratulating himself over its practi-cal inutility. Such thoughts will suggest them-selves in spite of our peaceable hopes and inten-tions.

tions. With the honorable exception of American oftions. With the honorable exception of American of-ficials and those of our countrymen now residing in or passing through Paris, Admiral Farraguthas as yet received no attention during his sojourn-in this city. I cannot believe this to be intentional, inasmuch as his visit here is entirely unofficial and merely for the purpose of seeing the Exposi-tion and other objects of attraction for which this city has become famous. I am unwilling, how-ever, to omit this opportunity of stating that among the officials of France, from those in power about the throne down to the youngest officer who treads the deck of the most diminutive gunboat, there is not now existing much love or admiration for my American cousins. I regret that I find my-self compelled to record this fact; but observa-tion and experience teach me that it is one of self compelled to record this fact; but observa-tion and experience teach me that it is one of those undeniable truths against which the eyes of a discriminating man cannot well be closed. Whether this feeling results from a still slumber-ing jealousy engendered against us by Southern emissaries in the late war, or has found its origin in our action in regard to the Mexican imbroglio, this deponent would rather not venture an opinion; but that it exists is as clear to every American as the light of the day. The most amusing of all the visionary ideas which now roam unbridled through the excited imaginations of the people of France, is that imaginations of the people of France, is that America is responsible for the execution of Maxi-America is responsible for the detection of anti-milian, and that through the agency or inaction of our government that Prince was sacrificed in Mexico. This idea is not only amusing, but it is absolutely absurd, simply from the fact that of all the Powers of the earth, our
