freemen," he asserted his hearers that the "white masses of the North will not permit the sacrifice of certain principles which it professes to apply to the administration of public affairs; but this system actually prevents such application in most important cases, and makes legislation an eternal compromise with the opposition. The doctrine is not likely to prove popular while the Republican party is so largely in the majority. When, if it ever be, the Democratic party succeeds in getting the power into its hands, their arguments may appear more forcible. If they insist upon the adoption of the proposed plan, we may advocate it. Certainly no good Republican will do so until that time.

Among certain classes of not too ardent Republicans, there is a sort of sentimental feeling that because Judge Sharwood is a pure man, an upright judge and an able lawyer, and because he is personally known to them, it will be better to vote for him at the approaching election, rather than for a man whose name they do not directly or indirectly recollect. There can be no more hurtful and dangerous view taken of the situation than this. Arguing as we may of the responsibility of the judges, the fact remains that the election of a judge is a question of partisan views. Even if the choice of a judge was simply a matter of personal feeling, which could exercise no influence whatever upon political questions, the Republican candidate is as upright and able as the other, and deserves support from their fellow-citizens. But it is the question of "white rule" which is the question of Coppenhagens and rebel sympathizers against the people. The man, therefore, who through any private or public office, exerts an influence upon the minds of the people, contributes to the Democratic cause a certain amount of power and influence which the Republican party is unable to counteract.

These men are mere human beings with like passions and prejudices with ourselves, and they carry these with them upon the bench. There is, moreover, a great principle at stake. It is not merely whether Judge Sharwood, but it is the broad issue whether the Democratic party shall defend the National and patriotic party and thus obtain a foothold, a "purchase" to enable it to accomplish greater victories in the future. It is the question of Andrew Johnson and his clique of Coppenhagens and rebel sympathizers against the people. The man, therefore, who through any private or public office, exerts an influence upon the minds of the people, contributes to the Democratic cause a certain amount of power and influence which the Republican party is unable to counteract.

But now the Yankee is hidden to lift up his head and to rejoice. Wise has planted one foot on the Constitution and the other on the New England soil, and sworn that the men of New England shall no longer be kept out of the South. He offers them his own protection, and teaches them to be free from their opposition to his new friends. Once more, he holds up before them the example of John Brown, and teaches them that the South depends upon a rapid infusion of Northern energy, education and enterprise. "White rule," which means light, and education, and progress, and civilization and freedom, is to take the place of the old "black rule" of the South, which meant ignorance and prejudice, and the banishment of every great thing for the country that General Henry A. Wise ran away safely from Henrico Island in 1862. Otherwise he might not have lived to render the services which he has rendered to the South, and to the "everlasting Yankees," whose presence he now invokes as earnestly as he excluded them when he left the neighborhood of Henrico Island in 1862. This therefore these Southern States would perhaps ally themselves with Austria under ordinary circumstances, the popular repugnance to such French alliance, which regards Austria as the enemy of German nationality, would perhaps in case of war, drive them to seek alliance with Prussia rather than Austria. This is the greatest difficulty to be overcome in consummating the designs of Napoleon and Francis Joseph. Whether it will be successfully met, remains to be seen. In the meantime, however, an alliance between Prussia and Austria is hinted at, and this gives the subject a newer and more complicated aspect. The cable despatches this morning state that "an agreement has been arrived at between the Emperors of Austria and Prussia to the policy heretofore pursued on the Eastern question. The alliance between Russia and Prussia probably will have reference to the same subject. It may be that Prussia will be induced to ally herself with Austria, and while the Russian Emperor in consummating his designs upon Turkey it will help to crush the Austrian empire. In that case Prussia may be regarded as a second ally of the victor. These two great powers will prove more than a match for Austria and France, and will probably be able to resist any attempt to scheme that they may determine upon. The situation is intensely interesting, and we anxiously await further developments.
