that Mr. Seward has generously sacrificed himself by his friendly relations to Mr. Stanton, his retirement from the Cabinet will seem somewhat more graceful. If a clamor of a generously sort, can be raised by the few Johnson organs in the country, Mr. Seward's retreat will be, in a measure, covered. It will be made to appear that he gracefully withdraws, full of honors; and while he may chaim the Executive favor, in view of his resignation, he will seek to challenge a renewal of Republican confidence, by appealing to his support of Secretary Stanton which will be quoted, as compelling him to share his exile with him. The trick is not a very deep one, and will not deceive many. Mr. Seward has wandered too far to find his way back again at this late day. The best he can hope for is retirement and oblivion.

The Washington correspondent of the Boston Advertiser has the following items:

Washington, Aug. 22, 1867.—The Surgeon-in-Chief of Gen. Thomas's staff telegraphs that the general has not been in Louisville for a number of days, but is at the springs in West Virginia under treatment for a disease which has troubled him somewhat of late. The surgeon also says the general's health is in such a condition that his transfer to New Orleans during the present heated term would be attended with serious results. This official medical protest will be laid before the President.

Mr. Johnson stated to-day that he placed no reliance upon the charges of corruption made against General Howard, but thought he was a fanatic, and through him the Bureau could be used to organize a Republican party in the South, and he should, on this account, be obliged to remove him.

The President declared to-day in the most pos
