BRIDGET DURGAN.

The Approaching Execution---The Prisoner's Various Confessions---Au-other Expected--Its Supposed Par-port--She Befuses to See Visitors.

DITECT She hefines to See Visitors. Port-She hefines to See Visitors. New Barrswick, N. J., August 27th, 1867.— The approaching execution of Bridget Durgan, which will undoubtedly take place on Friday next, at noon, is creating greater interest than any other event of the kind that ever occurred in this country. The interest centres not upon the woman hereelf, nor sympathy for her, but arises from a strong and carnest desire to know the whole of the truth of that fearfiel night's tragedy i on the .25th of February last. There is, consewhole of the truth of that fearth night's tragedy on the 25th of February last. There is, conse-quently, so much anxiety to know the details of the case that even a simple statement of it, no matter how brief, is, for various reasons, very

The woman has made three very verbose con-Inc woman has made three very verouse con-fessions that might be termed dying declarations; but they are all contradictory, and as insinua-tions are given out by Bridget that a fourth dying but they are given out by Bridget that a fourth dying tions are given out by Bridget that a fourth dying declaration will be given out previous to the fatal hour of death, the other confessions are in the meantime held back, or rather suppressed. Her last confession in some respects varies little from the first, being merely a long history of her do-mestic life and her little peecadiloes in the kitchen, and when it comes to the real point of the tra-agedy she is very reticent. She solemuly avers that she did the deed all alone; that she and her mistress had some words; she struck her, and when ordered out of the room, her temper over-came her, or, as she says herself, the devil pos-sessed her, and not until she saw her mistress lying lifeless, huddled up in her blood, did she sessed her, and not anti-she saw her interess lying lifeless, huddled up in her blood, did she realize the fearful extent of her crime. She exonerates, and has done so all along, any compli-city on the part of the woman Gilroy in the murder.

From information recently obtained, however, it is evident that she has concealed the truth in all the statements that she has made. The murall the statements that she has made. The mur-der was not committed by her alone nor was murder intended that night, although such in fact resulted. House robbery was the object; but, on discovery, murder became a necessity. Bridget had been in the house some time and knew the begins discovery. on discovery, murder became in necessly. Diago had been in the house some time and knew exactly its every arrangement. The husband of her victim was called from home, and was not likely to return until far in the morn-ing. The mistress was supposed to have re-tired to bed, but instead of that she had only thrown herself upon the lounge after putting the child to sleep. All quiet in the house, Bridget admitted her accomplice, and on tiptoe they were ransacking it for money and valuables, when they were interrupted, and then the bloody work commenced. Who that iman-the accom-plice-was is the mystery, and hence the desire ito learn anything of him. No doubt he has long since left the country, and yet it may be that ha' is still hovering in the vicinity of where the crime was committed in fancied security, as so far there is nothing to implicate him in the deed means the statement of it woman who could not crime was committed in fancied security, as so far there is nothing to implicate him in the deed except the statement of a woman who could not be believed over under the colleger with the be believed even under the gallows with the hal-

What gives intensity to this tragedy and universal fear is the fact that there may be a domestic Bridget Durgan in every household, and no one compelled to hire help can count on safety. In England there is a class of professional bur-In England there is a class of professional bur-glars who confine themselves to house robbery, in which they are assisted by a female accomplice who has obtained the situation of a domestic in the family. There, however, they seldom resort to the knife; for, if discovered, a sort of sand-bag is used, and the victim is knocked senseless, but not deprived of life. Here, however, what-ever is the reason, a knife or a bistol is invariably ever is the reason, a knife or a pistol is invariably

It is the fear that this crime may become epi-It is the fear that this crime may become epi-demic, as did the garotte a few years ago-another foreign style of robbery—that increases the desire to know a truthful version of the affair from Bridget herself. She has given three ac-counts, as has been already mentioned; whether the promised fourth and last account will be more truthful remains to be seen, if it has the stamp of honset honesty.

All the accounts published of this woman, that she is an idiotic, irresponsible creature, are so much trash. She is no beauty, by any means; but she is a reasonable, thinking, crafty woman; but she is a reasonable, thinking, other, a pas-doubly bad, because in addition to being a pas-sionate woman she has considerable low cunning. She clings to life like a sensible woman, but la-bors under the impression that if she keeps the dotails of that if earful of her death. Of the alleged accomplice of Bridget, the woman Gilroy, although it has been said that she is a Washington Market pickpocket, nothing bad is known. A very good likeness of her has been shown to the detectives of this city and others that the pickpock of the pick of the set of the set that would be likely to recognize her but the shown to the detectives of this city and others that would be likely to recognize her: but the most that they can say of her is that her face is familiar to them. She has not been indicted yet, and according to report she will be discharged when the Grand Jury meets in September. Of the two the woman Gilroy is the most forbidding and apparently of the quickest intellect. In short, she is non-committal, and will hold no conversa-tion with any one but be immediate friends, and tion with any one but her immediate friends, and no one can see her without permission from the Sheriff. This seems to be rather a stringer to adopt towards an alleged offender who has not even yet been indicted. Since the incarceration of Bridget Durgan at Since the incarceration of Bridget Durgan at the jail of New Brunswick over thirty thousand people have called to see her; but at her own re-quest all curiosity seekers are now shutout. Hav-ing made up her mind that the law will be carried out at the time appointed, she wishes to be as much alone as possible with her spiritual advisers. Heretofore she busied herself in listening to the speculations of visitors concerning her case, and reading every item that was published relative to reading every item that was published relative to her. Now, as the day of execution draws near, she is ner. How, as the day of execution draws hear she is enjoined to think of matters pertaining to her soul's interest. The keeper of the jail says that but for the various articles that have appeared in but for the various articles that have appeared in the papers, which, by some means, invariably reached her, he would have had, ere this, a full confession. That seems to be rather an illogical conclusion. He now has three confessions. When he gets the fourth he can neither say that Bendert is stingy nor that the press has crossed Bridget is stingy nor that the press has crossed his path. The unfortunate woman realizes her position and bears up well under it; but it has not al-fected her appetite or her rest at night. She does not go moping about her cell bewailing her fate, not go moping about her cell bewailing her fate, but, characteristic of the woman, fondly and falsely hopes that something will turn up to avert the doom awaiting her. Although she may not realize it as some of her sympathizers would have her, she has more common sense than to believe that Friday can be obliterated from the record of time, and that she can jump into the middle of next week. She has had so many mawkish condolers since her incarcera-tion that she would be more than a woman if so many mawkish condolers since her incarcera-tion that she would be more than a woman if she did not now begin to think that she was a saint instead of a sinner. On Monday last four ladies and a child were seen to leave her with weeping eyes. The oldest in the company would probably be seventy, the child, a girl, not over seven. It seemed rather a strange place to take a child, and rather an early age to famili-arize her with crime. arize her with crime.

The excuse generally given by help employed a long way off was that they had got on a burst in the city, and they wanted to get home. The same gentleman, however, du not recognize the woman Gilroy.—N. Y. Herald.
