Mr. Herring backed; them all down on fire proof quality, and it having become generally known among the rafe exhibitors that our banker's safe intended for the Exposition had been damaged in transshipment, and left at Havre by the American Commissioner, our linglish competitors thought they could make short work of the only other safe which we had on exhibition, that laid any claim to burglar-proof quality. This was our ordinary fire proof safe, with small banker's chest inside; and so confident were the British safe-makers that they had caught us on an inferior safe, that they openly state they would open our safe in two hours and a lialf, and offered to bet us ten to one they would win the wages It was this safe, our third-class burglar-proof-one taker from among our stock without any especial selectionthat won the day over the best safe England could pro-The following is the "American" account saluded to inthe above, being an extract from the Paris corresponden of the American Artisan: The trial as to the opening was public as far as possible. the trial as of the opening was public as for as position, being limited only by the size of the building in which it took place. At 3.15 the outside or fire-proof doors of Herring's rafe were thrown open. At 3.40 Herring's men gave up the drilling, and, throwing aside their drilling apparate, commenced with wedges and hammers. The heers which arose from the English lookers on when the autelds door of Herring's safe was thrown open were loud and hearty; but they were fully equalled by the eers from the Americans (though in numbers only as ! to 35), when, at 4.35 the outside plate of steel of Chatd's rafe was thrown aside by Herring's men, thus exoring the outer surface of hard, undrillable casting. Pifcen minutes sufficed to entirely remove this formidable to drills) material, the process being very much similar peeling the bark from an oak tree.
