CITY NOTICES. Messrs. Proctor & Co.2s Great Opening of Paris and London Clonks and Ladies' Walking Suits.

The most venerable resident will hardly remember a payer day in Philadelphia than Chestnut street presented yesterday, especially in its most central part, where the heanty and fashion of our city were attracted to assist at the grand Exposition of fashionable garments for ladies, by Messrs, J. W. Proctor & Co. The fall "Opening" which had been announced to take place at this elegant Emporium of Fashion created as profound a sensation among the ladies of ereated as pronound a sensation among the indies of Philadelphia as the arrival of Sheridan excited among our politicians; and their enthusiasm, though differently expressed, was no less carnest and appreciative From an early hour until late in the afternoon the surging throng, passing in, circulating through, and emerging from the splendid salesrooms of this estab. dishment at No. 920 Chestnut street, kept up such a continuous scene of busy life as we have rarley witnessed. The visitors in the main room alone, for several hours during the day, could not have averaged less than from fifty to one hundred and lifty handsomely-dresed ladies. From a retired nook, where, in company with one of the proprietors, the writer took his observations, the effect was a perfect spectaele-a sort of kaleidoscopic panorama, in which there was a masterly intermingling of fair women, and here and there a brave man, with magnificent garments and splendid specimens of materials from which to make them; busy attendants engaged in cloquent explana-tions to interested listeners, with here a beyy of beautics lavishing their adoration around the Duchess of Wellington, the Princess of Wales, or the Empress Eugénic (. e. garments bearing these popular names), and in the adjacent fitting rooms (apartments that are mirrored and upholstered with a degree of taste and elegance that we have never seen surpassed) ladies, young and middle-aged, and some well advanced in life, as diverse in their preference as in their ages, werein raptures over the "nprelites." "Exquisite!" "Beantiful!" "Perfectly sweet!" "Charming!" "How very stylish!" "O, isn't that lovely?" "There, isn't that elegant?" "I never saw anything so handsome!" "My dear, you're crazy!" and a hundred other similar exclamations, mingled with the measured tones of polite clerks and the ceaseless rustling of silks and Altogether it was the grandest and most successful exhibition of fashionable garments for ladies' wear ever made in Philadelphia. A description of the various new garments exhibited could only be successful in an illustrated journal, and we shall therefore not attempt it, beyond a brief allusion to some few of the chief attractions in the opening, and the materials from which they were Among the most elegant, and we think they will be among the most popular novelties of the season, are the rich suits of Astracon -not an imitation, but the real skin of the animal. They were exhibited in white, gray and black, and made up in full suits. embracing cloaks, mufis, cuffs, collars and capes. In rich cloth goods and velvets the display was princely. The two colors that will be mostly in vogue during the season are a beautiful shade of violet and the new color called the Bisramek - a rich golden brown. In the former of these shades a gored woolen velvet Sacque, richly trimmed with satin and studded with jets, was universally admired; and the same may be said of a Bismarch of like material, and similarly trimmed. One of the most anique garments was the "Eug(nie" cloak. It was exhibited in various materials, and in its construction is gored, scalloped at the sides, with prominent points at the front and back. A "Marie Louise" cloak in the display, made of a rich velvet heaver, and exhibited in various colors, also elicited marked attention, and resulted in numerous "orders." A very graceful cloak, made of wine colored valours, richly trimmed, entitled the "Lady Wellingion," seemed to be a special favorite with ladies of more subdued taste. The "Colleen Bawn" is a pretty protegé of Mr. Proctor, and will undoubtedly be one of the most popular cloaks of the season. The display was also enriched by a splendid line of Velyet Patelots, trimmed with a crochet of cut beads, and a graceful style of garment, entitled the "St. Marc," made of velet, and trimmed with a heavy fringe of sewing silk, with a crochet heading richly ornamented with beads, though for elegance and comfort there was nothing more striking than their new "Walrussia"—a splendid velvet, trimmed in silver fox. The "Duchess of Sutherland" has a wide elecve, overhanging an under-sleeve of the same material, presenting an appearance nt once graceful and stylish. There was also exhibited an elegant assortment of Circulars in velvets, richly trimmed in lace and crochet work.

t not be forgotten that the Dres Department of this house is a feature of surpassing importance to the ladies of our city -a great convenience it fact, where they can have their orders attended to with instantaneous promptness, instead of being subjected to the usual delay at this busy season of the Mesers. Proctor & Co.'s display in this department won for them golden opinions, as their ready-made walking suits were altogether such specimens of beauty and elegance as have never before been presented to the American public. Briefly to particularize, we would notice among the Walking Suits displayed, a Lavender Irish Poplin, elegantly, trimmed in the same colored satin: a more elaborate, artistic, or reckerela garment it has never been our privilege to examine. Much praise was also bestowed upon a green Ctioman Valours walking suit, of similar design. A mazarine blue Irish Poplin, trimmed in silk velvet to match, was also an attractive feature in this department. The "Golden Pheasant" was a suit, made of very rare and beautiful material, decidedly. Indian in its lucs and fabric, and was pronounced "superb" at least one hundred times. A spangled Valencia was also greatly admired as a suitable dress for ladies in semi-mourning; and in the same category we may mention a black Irish Poplin; trimmed with purple of a very dark new shade. The "Rainbow Poplin" walking suit was also complimented for its novelty.

Passing from the Ready-made Department to the repositories of piece goods, everybody was astonished at the magnificent assortment of Black Silks-an-questionably the most elegant stock ever offered in Philadelphia – the celebrated makes of Bonnet and Guinait being largely in the ascendant; while in all the woolen fabrics, and velvets, and fashionable trimmings of every description, the assortment was most complete.
Altogether, this Dress-making Department, affording to ladies the opportunity of obtaining their dresses to order vithout any delay, is a feature for which Mesers. Proctor & Co. deserve the substantial thanks of our wives and daughters...

t In Langue Fore, for which this house is one of the most celebrated in the country, they display a splendid assortment of all such as are indigenous to this country, and that are in most popular request misk, Siberian, squirrei, sitch, ermine and chinchilla; while in the more costly Russian and Hudson Bay sables their stock will be equally complete in time for cold weather. Their sets in the former of these will range from $150 to $1,000 per set, and in the latter from $100 to $500 per set. As they defer making up these costly furs until the last moment, their customers have a double assurance that they are buying fresh goods, which is an important matter in the purchase of these luxurious articles.

Strong language, but entirely true, and worthy of the great Philadelphia Home Manufacture.

THE PLAN adopted by the Washington Library Company for the encowment of the Riverside Institute is one by which every subscriber receives more for what little money he may invest than could be pro-cured were the same amount expended in any other way. Besides an engraving, a present is also guaranteed. Many of these presents are worth quite fortunes the first in the list being $40,000.

To PRESERVE THE HAIR, stimulate its growth, and render it soft and glossy, use Jayne's Hair Tonic. This unequaled dressing for the hair being free from all deleterious substances, exercises a beneficial influ ence on the scalp, freeing it from scurf and dandruff. and in most cases causing new hair to grow on heads that have been bald. POPULAR BONNEY OPENING .- In Bonnets and Millinery Goods yesterday was witnessed a regular furore among the ladies. The well-known house of 1867 CARPETINGS. 1867 Messrs. E. P. Gill & Co., No. 720 Arch street, held what might be designated a grand millinery levee from morning till night, during which time some thousands of ladies must have paid their customary devotions at the fashionable shrine which Messrs. Gill & Co. have long since elevated into popular recognition. In fact, this house may challenge comparison in the taste which it uniformly displays in the selection and presentation of beautiful Parisian Bonnets. In their "opening" yesterday, while the admiration expressed was unbounded and general, the critical praise was Hats, which may be briefly particularized as follows:

A full-size drab bonnet, with cased front, made of a rich royal velvet, with a satin veil of the same shade falling from the back, the face trimming of scarlet

One of the most beautiful things in the display was a purple royal velvet bonnet, with velvet trimming extending from the front, with clasps of velvet pansies

Much attention was given to, and not a few orders given for, a superb Miss's bonnet of white French felt, with a pulling of blue satin on the face, and a bandeau of blue velvet and pink buds; the outer trimming forming a point at the back, edged with fringe. There were many other choice things in this department, which we must pass over in order to glance at the display of Hats. Of these, as in the bonnets, there is a variety of shapes and styles. The bonnets, we may emark en passant, are decidedly more bonnet-like, both in form and size, than they have been for severa seasons, and the style of Hats to be worn are also worthy of our regard as tangible coverings for the head. Those displayed by Messrs. Gill & Co. are extremely pretty, and to misses and ladies on the sunny

A handsome brown velvet hat in the "opening, with high crown, pointed front and back, with a frim-ming of royal velvet and gilt fringe; seemed to clicit most favor with young married ladies. A black velvet hat, with blue ostrich tip, velvet quilling and blue satin lining, was also a favorite, the laurels of which were contested by a superb drab felt, with flat crown and rolled brim, and a trimming of brown velvet hand-somely ornamented with steel and fringe.

are Bismarck, drab and blue, and that satins and laces constitute the prominent materials for trimmings. The 'opening" was a decided success. 'All the French bonnets and hats displayed were of their own direct importation, and their assortment of general Millinery Goods was complete and admirable in every particular.

We need not comment upon the fact that Messrs. Gill

& Co. have always maintained a reputation for selling at anoderate prices, as their reputation in this particular
