"During a recent visit to the village of Olney, in Bückinghamshire, I paid a visit to the summer-house in which 'The Task' is believed to have been composed. This 'nook' or 'summer parlor', as Cowper has at different times designated it, is situate at the bottom of the garden attached to the house in which the poet resided from 1767 to 1786, and is a small, plain rustic building of lath and plaster, covered with red tiles; and run around the interior by a small bench. In this retreat, which is contiguous to the tree beneath whose shade Cowper was wont to linger in the peaceful summer hours, he isolated himself from the social and domestic interruptions to his literary labors, and it is in obvious allusion to the solitude which he here enjoyed that he says in 'The Task'.

"'Had I the choice of sublunary good What could I wish that I possess net here.'

What could I wish that I possess not here."

"This valuable relic—valuable alike to the relic—hunter and the admirers of Cowper—is fast lapsing into ruin and decay. The summer-house, together with the garden in which it is situate, is held upon lease by Mr. Osborn, a baker and confectioner of Olney, who has gone to some expense in improving the surrounding property, but whose means are inadequate to the placing of the relic in a proper state of repair. It has been entirely overlooked by the Throckmorton family, who have attended only to those spots associated with the memory of Cowper which are situated upon their estate near Weston.
