One day, at Ballarat, a man rushed up to the police magistrate, his face livid, and speechless with excitement, so that the magistrate began to think he had just committed or witnessed a murder. At last he found words to express himself. He had come upon a nugget so higher accordance with the come upon a nugget so higher accordance with the second solution. So that it appears that the disfigurement of the face, supposed by the Coroner's jury to be the work of decomposition, was in fact the work of the murderous deed. On the feet were found two gaiters, of the found words to express himself. He had the just committee a single part of the second single part of the shown in cyidence to have found words to express himself. He had come upon a nugget so big he could scarcely carry it, and dared not bring it alone. Two or three of the police went back with him to help him, and he brought it in triumph, followed by a procession of diggers. And indeed it wis a nugget. It was about as big as a leg of mutton, and much the same shape, white lumps of quartz sticking to it like so much fat. It weighed a hundred and thirty-live pounds, and he was offered £5,000 for it on the spot. He refused to a sell it, and
