The sup-at the give and take which is the charm of The reason for this is soon found. The sup-posed leaders of fashion accept the modes from their milliners rather than design them: this is the great mistake. A dressmaker by profession, rather than education or inspira-tion, is not likely to possess that sense of beauty and elegance, known as "good taste," which springe from a refined and edd-cated mind. Habit gives expertness and neatness of work, but more is requisite; sen-timent, and a certain distinctive character which fits the dress to the wearer—these at-which fits the dress to the wearer—these at-

With such imagination and tact have no part. This argument fits the tailor, milliner, and "dressmaker alike well, as it is their choice which rules the world, and causes the dis-centent which is so often expressed by ladies centent which is so often expressed by ladies are obliged, to adopt lest they should be thought singular. In this was much rea-son, and was the thought of a great leader of fashion, who originated the first bonnet of the kind; but this was too pretty for a Parisian milliner to see, and, in conjunction with some Aspasia, not to attempt to alter and speil simultaneously, whereby we now see a vizor of a plate shape worn on the forehead in-stead of the head, and declining towards the eyes, like the peak of a helmet. Can anything be more inelegant? What can be said of a fashion that hides the forehead and eyes of a woman, leaving be head dressed after the manner of that of Ma-dame Dumollard? No lady of education or taste could ever so abuse her appearance; her sense of the beautiful could never be so converted. Whence came this, if not from the theatre, where the most part of dressmakers seek their inspirations, as little heed is taken of those actresses who little heed is taken of those actresses who mare not greatly dressed? Well, is it from the extravarances of stage castume intelligence is greater, their accuirements are not greatly dressed: well, is it from the extravagances of stage costume a lady should take example? Medern French Frastions Criticisms by a Frenchman. The following criticism on French ladies is from the pen of a Frenchman: The greater portion of the women of our time have, little by little, lost the sense of true elegance; they have for yoars past sought, in dress and hair-dressing, a style which should best set off both face and figure, and most of their efforts have not resulted well, the ever-changing fashion being so far their friend by soon altering their disfigurements. from the portion of the women of our true elegance; they have for yoars past sought, in dress and hair-dressing, a style which the books in which the members of his class wrote their essays, and which he was at great pains to correct. He was a de-lightful companion, never disputatious, ready

There is no need to confound them, of that the one and the other should have her own especial style. Is it not to be wished that the Parisian lady, so long the arbiter, the queen of fashion, not only for her own but other countries, should retake her sceptre and old prestige, and once more follow the counsels of her own pure taste in preference to that of her dressmaker? It is doubtless easier to be guided, but social individuality is lost, of itself the basis, the beau ideal of correct costume, by which may be avoided the too frequent result of an amalgamation of bad taste and absurdity. The following is a description of two ex-ceedingly pretty Bismarck bonnets:—The first is of a pale shade of this most esteemed of colors; the form is that called "Josephine," which has a flat crown; at the back there is a piece of Bismarck satin ribbon edged with a piece of Bismarck satin ribbon edged with a sath rosette; another many state is a Fanchon, formed imply of alternate crosscut bands of satin and velvet; the curtain at the back is replaced by a row of satin vandykes, and in the front there is a wreath of olive leaves in Bismarck velvet, the fruit being represented in dead gold; the strings, which are made of piece velvet, are piped with satin. A foreign princess, who was recently mar-ried in Paris, ordered her wedding-dress, ha decorated with hand embroidery, and, says a correspondent, rarely have there been more suk and emoroadered with pansies, a wreath of pansies is worked down the centre of the front breadth and continued all pound the hem. The mauve paletot, with Hungarian sleeves, is enriched with similar embroidery, as are also the close-fitting white silk sleeves underneath them. as are also the close-nitting white silk sleeves indemeath them. As to the reception dress, it is in an en-tirely novel style, and is composed first of a train skirt, made of pink gros grain, and trimmed with a box-plaiting of pale blue silk corded with pink. The second skirt (also a train) is of pale blue fuille, and on it embroi-dered rosebuds stand out well in relief: a pink Bashes have become very important accessories to a lady's toilette, ever since paletots have been worn short enough to render them such conspicuous objects. Sashes are made of white ribbons, of gros grain, of satin and pitals; his daughters knit his stockings a of velvet, all cut from the piece. The make his shirts, and cook, and wash, Parisian sash, or that which Worth intro-iren and sew, in a way that leaves little duced, is the most general. It is made with over for "Shakespeare and the musi three folds round the waist, a simple bow at classics." With his family he talks of
