A WOMAN'S EXPERIENCE ON THE OCEAN AND IN PARIS.

Specialité pour Dames.

(Correspondence of the Philadelphia Evening Bulletin.)

Paris, October 28th, 1867.—How or why it has been circulated I know not, but in America there is an idea current that females have more facilities and better protection in traveling in their own country than anywhere else; in fact, the necessity and my great desire to come to Paris this winter were almost insufficient to enable me to "sever my courage to the sticking place," and undertake it after the accounts I heard of the insults and hardships to which females traveling in Europe were liable. The wife of a Moravian missionary, one of our former Swiss consuls, and a Prussian lady, joined to re-assure me; and here I am, happy in the conviction that a lady can maintain her right to the title wherever there are beings with human sympathies, or capable of ordinary discernment.

The twenty-ninth of September the Arago sailed out from New York. A more select and agreeable company could not have been thrown together or chosen for traveling companions than the passengers on board. A number of families intending to reside in Paris during the winter, giving their children the advantages of a French course of instruction; artists seeking models and inspiration amongst the works of the old masters; invalids bound for the south of France, where the climate is of a more even temperature than in the southern American States; and bold travelers intending to brave the Alpine storms and Russian winter, and a few hurrying away from scenes of distress and sorrow to new scenes and occupations—these composed our ship's company. In twenty-four hours we were like one family. Our captain, gentlemanly and untiring in his attentions to all, was father, brother, physician and chaplain. When the storm rocked the steamer like a row-boat on the rapids of Niagara, and old and young male and female paid the penalty of tremors in the dominions of Peleion, it was marvelous to see the expedients resorted to by the captain for each peculiar case. None but the aged and those who were previously ill were allowed to remain in their state-rooms. The sailors were ordered to make bean bags for the young people to toss, rings of tarred rope for the gentlemen to substitute for quills, and camp stools, reclining chairs, and every comfort that could aid in making the sea-sickness company willing even to tolerate life were placed before them.

Grapes, lemons, sugar balls, mint drops, ginger snuff and apples were the favorite articles of diet until the fury of the storm gated. Then the transformation scene was extremely ludicrous. Five meals per day failed to satisfy the ravenous appetites, and the promenade deck was crowded from daylight till near midnight with as lively a company as ever graced an ocean steamer. There was nothing to mar the pleasure of even the most fastidious. The sailors were orderly and respect-ful; the captain and officers patient and gentlemanly; the gentlemen passengers, without exception, attentive, polite and temperate; and the ladies, possessing a full share of personal attractions, displayed none of the vanity and spirit of rivalry so often exhibited on long voyages. The patriarchal head of our company was Mr. Edward C.

Delavan, a leader in the great temperance reform both in America and Europe. His influence was felt and acknowledged by all. At the age of seventy-five he was crossing the fifth time, in perfect health, and to his clear intellect we were indebted for most delightful reminiscences of his travels to Paris at the time of the restoration of the Bourbons. A copy of his new book, "The Con-
