EVENING BULLETIN. Friday, November 22, 1867. RECONSIDERATIONS.

Daniel Webster once said that a man who never changed his mind was a fool, and it is evident that there are very few fools in the Select and Common Councils of Philadelmhia. A week ago, twenty gendemen of Common Council voted to preserve Broad street from being cramped down to narrow and insufficient dimensions. It is to be presumed that these gentlemen, being public the tax-paying public anxious for a radical gislators, had examined the subject, and voted intelligently upon it. But a short week has elapsed and eleven of them, in order to

It is a comfortable thing to know that the Councils of Philadelphia are not constituted in the Bohea Steam Fire Engine Company and escort them to their hose house, where the visitors will be entertained with Samshou and the best Young Hyson tea, and the papers of the next morning will tell how the tables of the "Confucius beys" groaned with first-chop delicacies of the second with the second with Samshou and the best Young Hyson tea, and the papers of the next morning will tell how the tables of the "Confucius beys" groaned with Samshou and the best Young Hyson tea, and the papers of the next morning will tell how the tables of the "Confucius beys" groaned with Samshou and the best Young Hyson tea, and the papers of the next morning will tell how the tables of the "Confucius beys" groaned with Samshou and the best Young Hyson tea, and the papers of the next morning will tell how the tables of the "Confucius beys" groaned with Samshou and the best Young Hyson tea, and the papers of the next morning will tell how the tables of the "Confucius beys" groaned with Samshou and the best Young Hyson tea, and the papers of the next morning will tell how the tables of the "Confucius beys" groaned the second the papers of the next morning will tell how the tables of the "Confucius beys" groaned the second the papers of the next morning will tell how the tables of the "Confucius beys" groaned the papers of the second tell the papers of the next morning will tell how the tables of the "Confucius beys" groaned the papers of the second tell the papers of the next morning will tell how the tables of the "Confucius beys" groaned the papers of the second tell the papers of the sec Councils of Philadelphia are not composed of stolid, hard-headed men, foolishly bent of some mind for a mind f upon being of one mind for an indefinite zeumber of weeks. The Lexibility which adapts itself to pressure is the true policy for public men. It is impossible to please all, and the Websterian plan of pleasing all by turns is undoubtedly the best one. The man who can proudly refer, in the future, to his yotes on both sides of a question cannot make the feether of t upon being of one mind for an indefinite soup, puppy-ragout, kitten-stew and rat-tail The reasonably assailed.
