In 1812, Mr. Quincy made a great speech on Maritime Protection, in which he introduced this of his public career, including a number of his eloquent speeches, before and after the beginning cussed, and upon this point the testimony of Mr.

The last twenty years of his life were spent in a quiet retirement, in the enjoyment of the classical pursations of his whole life, but with all his faculties and interests still keenly alive to public affairs. In reference to the keen enjoyment which Mr. Quincy derived from his classical acquirements, it is interesting to note the fact that at six years of age his widowed mother bravely put him at the Phillips Academy, at Andover, where he remained twelve years, commencing his Latin with Cheever's Accidence, upon his first entry at the school. Of his first experiences his mastering the school of his first experiences his mastering the complex of age has a work of at rare but small, the well-respond to the fact that at six years of age has work of at rare but small. We have marked many passages of this most necessing biography for quotation, but must acquaintance with John Randolph, of Roanoke. interesting biography for quotation, but must confine this notice to a few of the many auccodites and incidents of Mr. Quincy and his contemporaries, with which it is richly interspersed.

Mr. Quincy normed a very preasure, personal descended of senders and gentlemen, a patriot and the son of a patriot, well known to all who know America,—an upright magistrate, an eloquent senator, a fearless champion of the right, amon of the world, a man of letters and a sage, a "It seems, according to one of his stories about" dotes and incidents of Mr. Quincy and his contemporaries, with which it is richly interspersed. Of Joseph Dennie, afterwards well known in Philadelphia as the editor of the "Portfolio," and the centre of a brilliant literary circle, the following amusing aneedote is told:

"Mr. Dennie made a profession of studying the law, but he did not waste much of his time upon the practice of it. The story goes that he opened an office in Charlestown, N. H., ready for the entertainment of clients. On aday one strayed in.

They call upon us to give it up and worship him, that the whole world may be happy together,—especially the cottonbe happy together,—especially the cotton-brokers. Don't they wish we would?" Hancock's directions, made his first appearance on any stage in the midst of a performance, are rested the actors, and carried them off in custody to answer for their misdeeds. He helped to swell the public opinion which, provoked by this severity of persecution, as the friends of the drama estecmed it, not long afterwards compelled the repeal of the old laws, and procured the aharter of the Boston Theatre. And he was one of the crowd that thronged its auditorium on the opining night, to celebrate the triumphant issue of the contest, and to witness what really marked.

I monthed to see whereunto this thing would grow, Randolph cried out, in his shrill; deliberate tones, point they wish we would?"

To those who are now accustomed to the lightning speed of modern travel, the following account of Mr. Quincy's trip to New York winged with the ardor of a young lover, will be interesting:
