WRANGELL'S LAND.

Believers in the Seward manifest-destiny doctrine of expansion, enunciated, political gravitation, or whatever it may be called, may fancy that Providence as well as politics is on their side. Alaska, or Walrussia, has "gravitated" as naturally as Newton's apple. St. Thomas and St. John, in the West Indies, seem to be coming to us in the same way; though it may be claimed that Denmark should deliver them in good condition, and that she cannot do, after the late hurricanes and earthquakes that have made ruins of them, destroying all the houses and estates, and more than half the stock, including the people, voters for or against the annexation. But the repairing of damages and the substitution of American for Danish edifices will afford selfie good employment to Secretary Johnson's and Secretary Seward's ivetories.

But the providential part of our new territorial expansion may be thought to be in the discovery of a continent in the Arctic Ocean by an American whaling vessel, telegraphed as the Nell, which has lately returned to the Sandwich Islands. Captain Leavitt, of the King, reports that, the season having been uncommonly mild, he went much further north than the whalers usually go, and found heretofore gone, and that in latitude 73 deg. 30 min. he sighted land, and sailed along its southern coast for several days, at one time being within fifteen miles of it. The land is described as elevated, with a mountain, supposed to be an extinct volcano, near the centre, and distant ranges visible beyond. The lower land, near the coast, is described as free from snow, and apparently covered with vegetation. Captain Haley believes that he has discovered a great polar continent.

Arctic exploration has not been directed very energetically, in past times, to the northwestern part of the American continent. To solve the problem of the Northwest passage was the grand object, and nearly all the series of resolutions in which they bitterly denounce Minister Adams and Secretary of State Seward for not interfering in behalf of the doomed men, and glorify the trio who sniffed, as "patriots, heroes and martyrs." The preamble to the resolutions sets forth that "allegiance on the one hand and protection on the other are equal and correlative duties between the citizen and the State; but each man has the unqualified right to transfer his allegiance from one government to another; and when such transfer is duly made and the trust is accepted, the government which accepts his allegiance is bound in honor and duty to protect him against foreign tyranny and injustice." This principle is clearly established, and generally recognized on this side of the Atlantic; but it is not in accordance with the general sentiment of the American people that these shifts and pleas of allegiance should be too frequent, lest their sincerity be liable to suspicion. An Irishman cannot become a naturalized citizen of the United States until he first renounces all allegiance to any foreign government whatever, and the fact of his having become an American citizen by adoption, to suit his own purposes, gives him no special right to engage in political plots and broils upon British soil, much less to commit murder thereon. If Allen, Gould and Larkin had been Americans by birth, instead of by adoption, the British authorities would scarcely have considered this fact a justification of murder, and the men would have been hung all the same, the most that Secretary Seward or Minister Adams being able to do for them, within the line of their authority or duty, being to see that they had a fair trial. When Commander Ingraham of the St. Louis, took Martin Kozta off an Austrian war vessel, it was in recognition of the principle with which the resolutions of the St. Louis meeting set out. Kozta was an Austrian by birth, but an American by adoption. The Austrian Government does not recognize the right of any of its subjects to transfer their allegiance, and when Kozta revisited his native land he was arrested and forced to do the military duty that is imposed upon every subject. It was under these circumstances that Commander Ingraham interfered, and by force restored Kozta to the protection of the American flag. If Kozta had been charged with an infamous crime, or had been detected in plotting revolution and rebellion on German soil, the case would have been widely different, and no sane American officer would have interfered in his behalf, even though the accused had been born upon the soil of the United States. The whole Fenian business has been a series of blunders from its inception, and the latest move of attempting to glorify and endow murderers with the crown of martyrdom is the greatest blunder of all.

A SLIGHT MISTAKE.

Mr. Ross, of Illinois, fell into a trifling mistake on Saturday when he declared, in reference to the vote on impeachment, that "the House had condemned the action of the Committee on Reconstruction and given its endorsement to the judicious measures of the President." This, we repeat, was a trifling mistake, as Congress has done nothing of the kind. There is not a single Republican member of the House who does not utterly repudiate and condemn Mr. Johnson's "judicious measures." Both the majority and the minority reports agree in branding his whole policy as bad, mischievous and disgraceful. They differed from each other simply on the practical question of the legal status of his offence, the one holding that they were impeachable under the Constitution, the other believing that they were not.

To make comfort as Mr. Johnson can get out of the vote of Saturday, he is heartily welcome. His sole "endorsement" comes from the forty-two Democrats of the House, and no one will deny him the sorry consolation which he may find in such fellowship The impeachment question is a judicial one, but there is no acquittal for the President in the fact. His condemnation stands recorded in the two reports of the Committee, and warranted with his own language. The impeachment merely signifies that there are such technical difficulties in the way, as a conviction the majority of the House think that a trial was inexpedient. It will, doubtless, incite Mr. Johnson to new acts of usurpation and aggression, for he is of that peculiar disposition which takes advantage of every reprieve, not for repentance but for the commission of new offices. He will need to be suspected, watched and guarded at every step, and he will find no abatement in the determination of Congress to do those good offices for the country which it represents. To talk about the vote on Saturday as an "endorsement" of the President is simple nonsense.

The story of the mortality from cholera on the packet-ship Lord Brougham during her recent voyage from Hamburg to New York, is a most terrible one. Out of three hundred and fifty-eight passengers on board, seventy-five perished of the disease. Of the seventy-five who died, thirty-three were children under ten years of age. Entire families were swept away by the epidemic and no age was spared, from the feeble infant of a few months old to the middle-aged and the old. It is a sufficiently heavy thing to read this record, but a very, very light thing in contrast with the dreadful reality. Emigrant ships are at best bad and under the most favorable circumstances, badly enough provided with appliances for securing health, comfort and decency; but too many of those vessels are simply horrible floating pens, where human beings are treated with no more consideration than if they were dumb beasts in a cattle car. Any one who is familiar with the steerage accommodations of an emigrant ship will read with a shudder of how a terrible epidemic was superadded to the miseries of filth, poor food, the absence of pure air, the presence of the stench of bilge water, and the thousand and one discomforts incident to a crowded life on ship-board. With the well, the sick, the dying and the dead, all huddled together in the steerage of the Lord Brougham, the marvel is that any escaped.

A man who had lost a bet in New York, said was excepting the stress of that city in compliance with the terms of the bet, was streaked the other day for raising a dog. The loser of the bet made a fool of himself in more ways than one. In the first place the wager was a foolish one, and in the second place the authorities of that metropolitan
