Destructive fires seem to have become epidemic. The record of the past few days indeserves universal countenance and support, and it is only because of its recognized power for usefulness that we desire to caution its officers and managers against a policy which has recently been inaugurated, and which cannot fail to bring a laudable enterprise into ridicule wherever it becomes known.

A small tract, prettily printed, with a bright cover, bearing the seal of the Society, has just been set forth. It is called "Mr. Townsend's Walk and Conversation with His Children." We prefer not to know who is Children." We prefer not to know who is the author of this initial publication of this excellent Society, but it is utterly impossible that it can have passed the personal inspection of the gentlemen who constitute the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals.
