At the time of the fire she was asleep, and nobody else was in the house. Mrs. Ritz was aroused by a large bloodhound which always guarded the premises. The ball of the Hibernia Fire Company was given within the Hall, and as the com-pany was assembling for the festivities smoke was discovered in the Hall. An examination yas discovered in the Hall. An examination agwed that the woodwork about the heater and hues in the basement had taken fire, and the fiames had burned up the flues of the main hall. No aftarm was given, but the men in the Hall-being firemen, went to work, assisted by a cou-ple of policemen, and, after considerable trouble, succeeded in extinguishing the fire before any ple of policemen, and, after considerable trouble, succeeded in extinguishing the fire before any serious damage had been done. When the fire was first discovered the janitor was not present, and the fire buckets could not be got at.
