When Butler came to Richmond, a bloody purpose of revenge at once took possession of the former Major, and he determined to see if there was any fight leftin Butler, or if the battles of Bethel, Bermuda Hundreds and New Orleans had given him a distaste for the smell of gunpowder. So, after opposing his invitation to speak in the Convention, and indignantly retiring with the Convertion, and indignantly retiring with the Convervatives when he was received. White indicted a bellicose epistic, and obtained the promise of a friend to bear it, but unfortunately his friend got lost in a post-prandial fog, and ho had to bear his own message. He carried it to the Ballard and left it with the clerk to be sent to Buller by servant. Butler received it, called a number of his friends around him, and, after consultation, returned a verbal answer that Brewster has submitted to the Pennsylvania Legislature the following report: body (Senate), adopted March 25th, 1867, I have the honor to submit the following report: "By act of Assembly, approved May 20th, 1857, the Meadville Railroad Company was incorpo-rated. Section 5 of this act is as follows: 'Said rated. Section 8 of this act is as follows: Said Company shall have the right to build and construct a railroad, beginning at or near the borough of Meadville, and thence by such routes with moderate grades or connection with any other railroad in the county of Erie as shall, in the opinion of the President and Directors, best conduce to the public interest, to the city of Erie; and also from said borough of Meadville to any one or more of the coal fields in the county of Mercer, and shall complete the same within ten years from the passage of this act; and the said Company shall have the right to extend their road from any point thereof to connect with any after consultation, returned a verbal answer that he would meet White and give him ample satisfaction; but he immediately left on the train for Washington, where he appeared in his seat and gave another turn to the reconstruction thumb-Washington, where he appeared in his seat and gave another turn to the reconstruction thumbscrew. Constitutional Convention, Richmond, Jan. 14, 1868.—Major-Gen. B. F. Butler: Sir.—While you was in command of the Army of the James, and I having no more right than that of a private citizen, you undertook then to insult, denounce and send me from your Department. For the first time since that period we stand upon an equal footing; we stand upon the same soil, and occupy in every respect the same rights before the law, and the powers that be. I deem this, therefore, the proper occasion for a vindication of my own character before the country, and I demand of you that satisfaction that one gentleman will always accord to another.
