The Beaver Dam (Wis.) Citizen has a lengtly account of a singular suicide in the town of Lowell, Dodge county, on the 16th inst., the wife of Mr. John Quinn cutting her throat with a razo. It appears that the decased was an amiable young woman, twenty-three years old, married last Christmas as a second wife, and was living with her husband on his farm, to all appearance, happily. On the morning of the fatal day Mr. Quinn cift his wife in apparently fine spirits, with his little girl, seven years old. After his departure the woman washed her feet, hands and face, did the housework and sat down and wrote a letter to her busband. She then told the little girl that she did not feel well, and was going into the bedroom to lie down; kissed the child, went into the bedroom to lie down; kissed the child, went into the bedroom, told the girl to button the door on the outside, and not to open it, and when her father came to tell him she was in the bedroom. The little girl, left alone, fell asleep, and was wakened by noises and groans, which soon ceased. Calling her mother and getting no answer, the child became alarmed and ran to a neighbor's for help. On entering the room the woman was found lying in a pool of blood, near the door, and her throat cut, three incisions having been made. The following letter was found under the pillow of the bed in the room, and furnished the only explanation of the shocking deed:—

"My Dear Husband:—It is hard for me to write this to you, but it is just as I feel. I have chosen death from my own hand, rather than let you live a lifetime in misery and with me. This morning my heart is as black as the cap you wear. I sincerely thank you for all you have done for me since I first became acquainted with you up to the present morning, and may God bless, guide, guard and keep you through life; Suicide of a Female Fatalist.

wear. I sincerely thank you for all you have done for me since I first became acquainted with you up to the present morning, and may God bless, guide, guard and keep you through life; may you always have peace, and happiness follow you wherever you go. Take good care of our Eliza, as you always have done; she has teen a dear, good child to me since she came home to us. My dear husband, kow I wish I could encircle you with my arms once more, ere I commit the awful deed, for the last time. What I have to say now, I wish you to feel that it is the truth, and that only. It is not because I am sorry I married you. No, God forbid it. No, my dear husband; you have been all to me that heart could wish. Nor, is it because I am not a girl now. Neither do I wish to be with my father, or any of my relations; for what is all that to me if I cannot have a happy heart and peaceable mind to meet you when you come in from your day's labor. Oh, my dear one, may God keep your mind right that you may be able to bear each and every trial that the may see fit to cause you to bear. Now, I will give you and the people the just cause that you may not be accused of the deed which my own hands have done. Firstly, because I am not healthy; and I feet I am a burden to you, and will be as long as I live, instead of a comfort. Secondly, because I am not worthy of you; no, nor am I worthy of the least blessing my Saviour is bestowing upon me. Thirdly, because I am tired of living; yes, am not worthy of you; no, nor am I worthy of the least blessing my Saviour is bestowing upon me. Thirdly, because I am tired of living; yes, tired of living. My dear husband, when you read this you may think my heart was cold toward you, and I had no love for you; but I have; I love you with my whole heart, and am willing to suffer death from my own hands "than cause you a lifetime of misery: and I cannot see anything cise but that, for I have tried to throw it off my mind, but it is there as black as ever. I am very unhappy, and have been so for a long time. My mind is continually embarrassed with wicked thoughts towards myself. My bureau I wish you to give to Eliza as a keepsake from me. wicken thoughts towards myself. My burean I wish you to give to Eliza as a keepsake from me. Now, in conclusion, I bid you goodby, and may God bless and guide you through life and take you home to rest forevermore, and may He bless you all a thousand times for the love and bless you all a thousand times for the love and bless you all a thousand times for the love and bless you all a thousand times for the Avenue Lorente Manuel Strome, but be bappy to think I am gone.

From your own loving wife,

Mrs. Rachel Quinn.

To her dear husband, John Quinn.

To her dear husband, John Quinn.

The Citizen adds the following:

Mrs. Quinn's grandfather, grandmother and an aunt all died by committing suicide. She was subject to spells of deep gloomines, low spirits, or 'blues,' as it is commouly called. Many little details of her clothing, cooking and household affairs were found in such condition as to indicate that she had been several days engaged in making preparation for her death and funeral. It is one of the most cool and deliberate cases of suicide on record, and is a study for the students of psychogeniture and the laws of life.

Shocking Murder at Aspinwall.

(Correspondence of the N. Y. Tribune.)
PANAMA, January 23d, 1868.—Nothing worthy of note has occurred in political circles since-my last. We have no later intelligence from the interior, than that then sent you. As if to atone for the unusual quietness of ordinary matters a murder was committed at Aspin-wall on the night of the 19th, which parallels in the hideoneness of the surroundings the most sen-sational of New York tragedies. On the 4th inst. Carlos Fernandez and his partner, dealers in cigars, arrived in Aspinwall (otherwise Colon) on the steamer Barcelona from Cuba, and put up at the Howard House. From thence they commenced selling off their stock to retail dealers. They had a woman with them who attracted some notice when even she descended to the dining-room, but when even she descended to the dining-room, but she was finally supposed to be the wife of one of the Cigarreros. On Sunday last the partner of Fernandez announced to the landlord that they had procured a house and were going to move into it. nandez announced to the landlord that they had procured a house and were going to move into it the next morning. He then paid the hotel bill. About 4 o'clock the next morning a large box which had been used for packing cigars was carried from the hotel to a house in a back street. This early moving caused no suspicion, for in the tropics all are early risers, the morning being the most enjoyable part of the day. But when, some time later, a servant entered Fernandez's room, murder gave tongue. There was blood upon thebed where he had rested, blood upon the chairs where he had sat, the floor where he had walked his last steps on earth was dabbled with blood. Suspicion fixed upon the box as playing a part in the tragedy—the principal part, it was apparently thought, for it was, traced up before any search was made after the murderers, who were putting miles between them and that bloody room. It was learned that the box had been taken from the house, where it was sent as a blind, by a couple of negroes, and conveyed in a boat to the opposite shore. It was readily found and brought back to the city. It was a box of about 5 feet square and bore Fernandez's name and the trade mark on it. When it was copened there was exposed to view the city. It was a box of about 3 feet square and bore Fernandez's name and the trade mark on it. When it was opened there was exposed to view the body of the late Cigarrero, the trunk in one piece, the legs hacked off and laid by its side. Then commenced the search after the villainous partner. Half-a-dozen parties who had lately come over the road were seized here, but their innocence was easily accord. After much wandering of instice in the proved. After much wandering of justice in the wrong direction, the murderer, we are told, was yesterday arrested near Lion Hill, a station on the Panama Railroad, and taken to Aspinwall; a supposed accomplice was seized here and sent over. Should these men be convicted, say the people, their punishment will be light. There is no capital punishment here.

Terrible Tragedy in Memphis—A Son Killed by His Father.

[From the Memphis Post of Jan. 29.]

An awful affair occurred yesterday afternoon at the house of Mr. E. H. Dashrel, on the Raleigh road, about two miles from the city. His son, E. H. Dashrel, a man of dissipated habits, had been out during the day, and came home in the afternoon considerably under the influence of liquor. The father also, it seems, had been drinking, and a quarrel occurred between them about the son's a quarrel occurred between them about the son's behavior. The latter, it is said, struck his father and also his mother, and drew a revolver. In the course of the altercation the revolver was dis-charged, and the ball entered the young man's left breast, just below the nipple, inflicting a fatal wound. He fell to the floor in great agony, and was afterwards placed in bed and such aid given him as could be rendered. He suffered greatly until about one o'clock this morning; when he expired. The father was arrested yesterday evening by some of the neighbors and brought to this city.

Mr. Dashrel is an old citizen of this city, and was formerly the owner of a large amount of property. Coroner Cotton this morning went out to The father states that the son shot himself by some means. The facts will no doubt be developed at the examination before the magistrate.

Embezzlement in Pittsburgh. (From the Pittsburgh Commercial, of Feb. I.)
We noticed in yesterday's issue the arrest of Abraham Cohen on a charge of larceny by bailee, preferred by Marks Nathan, of New York, who charged him with having kept some four thousand dollars belonging to the firm of Goldenstan, Cohen & Co., hoop skirt dealers, of which they were both members, derived from the sale of goods at the branch house on Market street, this city. The accused was committed to jail yeaterday, by Mayor McCarthy, in default of four theusand dollars bail, for trial at Court.

Yesterday morning two more informations were lodged against Cohen before Alderman Humbert, one by William Prais and the other by Reuben Eittmesser, both charging him with concealing Rittmesser, both charging him with concealing goods with the intention of defrauding his creditors. Mr. Prais alleges that in the summer of 1867 he loaned Cohen, for the use of the firm of Goldenstan, Cohen & Co., ten thousand dollars Goldenstan, Cohen & Co., ten thousand dolars in cash. Mr Rittmesser also alleges that he loaved Cohen fifteen hundred dollars in cash on the same account. The prosecutors now allege that Cohen has shipped the goods of the frum in this city out of the county, with the intention of defrauding his creditors, and they therefore bring suit. The Alderman lodged commitments against the accused for trial on both charges.
