Correspondence of the Philadelphia Evening Bulletin. A GLIMFSE OF THE LEGISLATIVE CHAMBER, APROPOS OF THE NEW ARMY BILL.

The Army bill, passed by the Deputies a few days since, and by this time law, is the last triumph of Imperial policy over a public opinion massed almost unanimously in opposition. But it has been the most unsatisfactory and incomplete victory yet gained by the Second Empire. The discussion on the subject is beginning to be called the most dignified, the most prolonged, the most parliamentary, the most historical of all the great discussions admitted into the reports of the Lower House. Now the length and weight of a discussion depend upon the tenacity and fighting quality of the opposition; the debates in an ideally perfect despotism of the parental or patriarchal or Casarian order would be of the shortest. It is by the indefatigable energy of the Liberal deputies within the narrow limits allowed them in these debates, by the humane amendments which they valiantly forced into the bill, and by their great rally at the final vote (a vote of sixty Liberals against a hundred and ninetynine for the Government) that they have won the sympathies of the people and embittered the triumph of the raling party. These latter feel that . very few similar victories would mean defeat. The nation, through the mouths of its sole and trusty representatives, has insisted on its opinions more perseveringly than ever before since the coup d'état; and the ministers see with considerable dismay that since that day of lassitade and passiveness France has been forming ideas for hereelf and is beginning to assert them-

The Empire then has commanded its panoply of war. Napoleon has been justifying the addltional measures in terms which remind us a little of some importunate Mrs. Potiphar who has concentrated her soul upon a new bonnet. The neighbors, the Emperor represents, are all dressed better than he. His Minister of State draws torrible pictures of France languishing in inaction, . Miss McFlimsey unable to go to church, while Italy, North Germany and Russia are arrayed in magnificent millions upon her frontier. The Minister of War, Marshal Niel, takes a tcarful retrospective glance, and pictures the day when the army was compelled to abandon the Italian cause of 1859 at Villafranca, because it numbered but a hundred /and six or seven thousand men. The wary statesman forgets to remember that there was an available force of forty thousand then idle in Tuscany under Prince"Plon-Plon." Such reminiscences, however, since the vote of last Tuesday, are idle. France is henceforth armed both for defence and, what is more to the purpose and more imminent, for offence. By means of the Reserve now provided for, the army, in any emergency, can be quickly swelled from 550,000 to 800,000 men. This force can be thrown in its entirety upon any foreign point, the militia, under the form of the modified Garde Mobile, sufficing to garrison the fortreeses and large towns at home. This militia, from which there is no escape, will be in operation by the coming Spring, and will receive in its ranks many a conscript who, within the last four ycars, has purchased at the price of a substitute what he considered to be future exemption in good faith.

The last ameliorating amendment, to the effect that certain classes should be allowed the privilege of substitution in the militia, was introduced

CITY BULLETIN. PENNSYLVANIA STATE LUNATIO The Report of the Board of Trustees, of the Pennsylvania State Lunatic Hospital for 1867, nade to the Legislature, has been received. There were in the hospital, on the 1st day of January, 1867, 327 patients, viz.: 181 males and 146 females; admitted during the year, 170, viz.: 99 males and 71 females; discharged during the year, 157, viz.: 95 males and 62 females. Of this number 51 were restored, 39 improved, 33 were stationary, and 34 died. There, remained in the hospital, December 31st, 1867, 840, viz.: 185 males and 155 females. Although the admissions have not been so many as in the previous year, there is a decided increase in the number of patients, and during the whole year the wards, more particularly those occupied by the men, have been crowded. Such was the pressure during the early part of the summer, that the Board thought it advisable to have public notice given that none but recent cases of insanity could be admitted, until the number was reduced con-siderably below what it was in the early part of the month of July. day; declares La Liberté, there is a different expression observable in the faces one meets in the screets of Paris. A sense of personal insecurity, distrust of the future, and general appreliension of peril, certainly agitate many minds. It is feared by some that the Emperor, alarmed by his fading éclat, is thinking of playing a last card, and seeking in direct military renown what he has lost by unsuccessful diplomacy. In this new ambition, it is unnecessary to observe, the people have not the least faith in the world.

I attended two debates of the series, receiving cords try the courtesy of President Schneider, who spared me, on the presentation of the American Minister, a pair of the few admissions at his disposal. The discussions I heard, though not, perhaps, the most brilliant evoked by the subject, were of fair average interest, and I have brought away a vivid picture of the ability and dignity with which these difficult popular trusts were upheld by the opposition in the face of government superiority.

The Corps Legislatif meets in the old Palais Bourbon, whose classic gable and Corinthian abafts form an adequate pendant to the magnificent Madeleine, placed exactly in face on the other side of the river. Standing on the Madeleine steps you descry, closing one of those stately vistas in which Paris is particularly rich, the solemn portico of the Legislators rising dimly, a quarter of a mile away, across the axis of the Rue Royale, across the Place de la Concorde, with its heaping fountains and attenuated obelisk, across the Pont de la Concorde and the tawny current of the Seine. Built originally for a duchess of the House of Bourbon, it was seized upon, at the first revolution, for the accommodation of the Council of the Five Hundred; but restored in 1814 to the Prince of Condé, it was first hired out by, and then purchased from, that Prince or his descendants, for the political uses to which it is so perfectly adapted by its situation and plan.

As I crossed the Bridge of La Concorde, itself a monument or reminiscence of the tyranny of power and the patient heroism of the seditious (for it is built of the dibris of the Bastile), I was assailed by a severely respectable young man in a long scarf, who offered me, for a reasonable gratification, the privilege of assisting at that day's session. From which I inferred that the polite President's sorely-restricted liberality is occasionally played upon by venal applicants, or cise that the servants of the palace are capable of a sort of political simony.

In front of the Palace, pensively watching the oternal river flow, are four sitting colossi of the great Brench statesmen of other days, Sully, Colbert, L'Hôpital and d'Aguesseau. Higher up, at the angles of the stylobate, stand two severe female forms, Themis and Minerva. Under Louis Philippe, in the dissatisfaction that preocded the events of '48, the Paris wits used to complain that the deputies had left wisdom and instice ontside the door.

It was one o'clock. The debates commence at two. Entering the vestibule at the right, I found a number of red-waistcoated footmen already engaged in disposing of a throng of visitors, whom they despatched to different parts of the building, according to their rank. The families of the Legislators are accommodated in tribunes of a certain distinction. More ordinary spectators, like myself and many a better man, are sent up to a Bort of ring, just beneath the roof, where chinging to a red velvet partition, like the ring of a circus, they may regard the turmoil of politics far below, and find a music in the doleful song steaming up to their rather exaggerated superiority.

Giving my card to one of the red waistcoats, I climbed an infinity of narrow stairways or ladders Atmosed like flying buttresses, and was pushed. by a minth or tenth red waistcoat through a small door to the scene of my own proper peep. Of ENFANT PERDU. which anon.

THE STORM .- The snow storm of yesterday continued throughout the afternoon and until after dark. The snow was heavy and wet, and laid compactly upon the ground. Some of the trains coming into the city were somewhat delayed. The weather moderated considerably during the night, and this morning a thaw com-menced. About eleven o'clock there was another lively fall of snow, which continued for about twenty minutes. The wind shifted to the onthwest, and the sun made a severe struggle to southwest, and the sull made a sovere studges to get out. The atmosphere is sultry, and the snow on the skiewalks and in the streets is rapidly being converted into slush. The walking is any-thing but agreeable. In the rural districts the sleighing continues very fine.
