Very respectfully, your obedient servant, nothing that ever happens on land is at all comparable. There are people of this sort windless on some removed by appointment.

signed bystander. It is possible that the grumbler himself finds a certain relief in his grumbling, but he secures it at the expense of his fellows.

One of the most curious things, by the way, action, and that my order in the premises be not suspended until you have the full report of the reasons. Nobody who has ever been ten days at sea has failed to conceive a hearty dislike for one or two of his fellow passengers. Its grounds are unimportant and inexplicible. We have one man because he has a content of the reasons called for by you. I telegraphed you at the moment the order was issued, giving as full a statement of my reasons for my action as I thought could be made. I referred you to the order of General Sheridan, forbidding the elections, which you have on file at Head-gers. Its grounds are unimportant and inexplicable. We hate one man because he has a sour look upon his face, and another bedefined by the previously notified of this look.

Meals are punctual. The viands are always protty much the same each day, and on each day they all have pretty much the same flavor. The soup and the contries and the joint, are all perfectly alike, especially the soup. Then the effect of sitting, every day next to the same persons is singularly monotonous, as anybody knows who has ever tried the exciter for the 2 district, and which is an effective of the yeary lowest bottom of whose minds you have reached at the end of the first two days, and those persons not endeared to you by ties of affection or relationship, is one of the most deadening processes conceivable. But then, while you are at sea, to be deadened is the best thing that can belail you. Where all sensation is more or less unpleasant, any stimulas that excites it must be an evil, and any moral narcotic that lulls it must be a good. The again and the cities of the gods. To have a fretful man, or still worse, a fretful woman, sitting next to one for many days is a calamity to which nothing that ever happens on land is at all comparable. There are people of this sort.

In the same persons, it is fine the same flavor. The soup and the contribution of the first two days, and those persons not conceived at the end of the first two days, and those persons not endeared to you by ties of affection or relationship, is one of the most deadening processes conceivable. But then, while you are at sea, to be deadened is the best thing that can belail you. No possible line of conduct protects anybody against a deadly animosity of this kind. Accidentally we make up our minds that some one whom we meet daily in the Dearlike pro doll. Everything that he does not does not confirm this original convertion. We fully believe him capable of any strocity or folly—until at last the pilot comes on board, to take the ship into the harbor, and then, in an instant, the sea-scales hif from our eyes, and we are ready to believe all good things of all men.

Professor Huxley's Hidden ChessPlayer.

(From the London Spectator.)

Professor Huxley has told the workingmen of South London, in a very fine passage of his most masculine. English, what seems to him the highest meaning of education. It is such Professor Hursely has told the workingmen of South London, in a very fine passage of his most massuline. English, what seems to him the highest meaning of education. It is such a mastery of the laws of the game which is always being played between the individual man or woman and an unseen player who plays the phenomena of the universe on fixed and more or less accessible rules, as will combile the human players to carry on the longest game with the most brilliant success. But we must not spoil by summarizing a passage which deserves to live in English literature both for its vigor of style and the almost grand expression it gives to a particular reced which is gaining rapidly upon us, in spite of the desolation of its summit, in spite of the desolation of its summit, in spite of the desolation of its summit, in spite of the stern, simpst solem neglect, will which it passes by our highest life:

"Suppose it were perfectly certain that the life and fortune of every one of us would one day or other depend upon his winning or losing a game of chess.
