It was a question as to the scope and precise mean-Church, referring to this subject, and that was

In response to the legal demand made upon him, Bishop Potter convened a court to try this question. It was a clerical court, sitting in banc, to hear and determine a disputed point of canon law. It might have been supposed that such an abstract question of interpretation would have been disposed of calmly, soberly, advisedly, with dignity, harmony and decorum. But instead of this, the public mind has been surprised by a course of procedure the, very reverse of this. The fact has been betrayed that this trial is the mere definite manifestation of a heated and very bitter condition of partisan strife between two wings of the Episcopal Church. The case has been so managed as to make it the occasion of a general religious commotion. Instead of the quiet discussion of a point of law, there has been all the excitement of a fashionable martyrdom. This has ac-

RESTAURANTS. AMERICAN HOTEL, The Cigars manufactured by us under this brand are bona fide substitutes for best imported goods.

The public may rest assured that all our promises respecting them will be strictly fulfilled.

They are in all respects of highest grade, and will be uniformly so maintained.

The cestly material used provents their being very "low-riced." but they undersoll equal quality digars, imported from 25 to 40 per cept. (and even so per cent. on some sizes), which is an important feature in their favor. Smokers requiring strictly fine digars will see in this an inducement to give them a fair trial.

We are aware that we have to encounter much prejudice as to the locality of manufacture. This we shall endeavor to combat fairly, deciloing to imitate foreign brands in any respect except quality and workmanthp. Our object is to place before the public digars equal in all respects to the best-made if avana-under an original and covrighted brand, and our guarantee. We are not afraid to let them stand upon their merits alone, and do not fear an unfavorable verdict.

with him some document relating to the Emperor Maximilian; so that if we listened to the various stories announcing at periodical intervals the arrival of such documents, we must assume that, by this time, they would form not merely a folio volume, but an entire library. What, I am assured about this youth is, his profound aversion to everything connected with the Imperial Government of France. He seems to have inherited from his adoptive father all the rancors which animated Maximilian during the last period of his empire against Napoleon III., by whom he believed himself decoyed and betrayed. Our priests certainly foster this anti-gaillean aversion of the young Maxican, and to their cajolements it is owing; that he has entered the Papal army. His military service is, naturally, more a form than anything else—but the aim of our Government has been secured, it is another link, strengthening and completing the chain of that elerical and legitimate condition whose effects, if they are not soon paralyzed by some able stroke of the Government of the Emperor Napoleon, wills perfore lone, milks through the chain of the condition whose effects, if they are not soon paralyzed by some able SENATE.—The Chair laid before the Senate at communication from the Secretary of the Treasury in reply to a resolution of inquiry, setting forth his views in regard to the better security of passengers in steamships. Referred to Committee on Commerce.

Also, a communication from the President in reply to a resolution of inquiry, transmitting a report of the Attorney-General, with a list of counterfeighters parking days that here were made at 1865 with dates. Sir Edmund Head.

The death of the above gentleman took place suddenly in London on the 28th of January. He was the son of Rev. Sir John Head, baronet, and was born in 1805. He was educated at Winchester and Oriel Colleges, Oxford, graduating at the age of 22 as a first class in classics. Subsequently he was elected a Fellow of Merton College. In he was elected a Fellow of Merton College. In his early political life he was chiefly connected with the Poor Law Board. He was Assistant Poor Law Commissioner in 1938, and afterwards Commissioner. He resigned this office in 1847, to take the Lieutenant Governorship of New Brunswick, which he held till 1851, when he was elevated to the post of Governor-General of British North America. He remained in this office till 1861, when he returned to England, and became Chalman of the Hudson's Ray office till 1861, when he returned to England, and become Chairman of the Hudson's Bay Company, which office he held up to the time of his death. His term of office in Canada fell upon stormy times, but he displayed great self-will and determination and so conducted affairs as to receive the approval of the home government. He was quiet and unobtrusive, and not well adapted for the rough scenes of colonial political life, leaning no doubt to the quiet career of literary labors. He was not unknown in the literary world, as he published and made considerable reputation by a work entitled "Handbook of Spanish Painters"; and also "Two Chapters on Shall and Will." Socially he was a quiet, courteous gentleman, beloved by his friends. NASSAU.

Skirmlanes have taken place between the civil guard and the ineutgents in the city of Navarre—the Opena's officers maintaining their allegiance. Some few persons were wounded during the tomalt, and the ancient Franco-Hispano province of Navarre is sgitated at many points.

It appears as if the movement is the result of a deliberate and well-planned organization. The police are on the alert and have seized documentary evidence of the fact.

The officers have already found and carried away from Navarre three thousand copies of revolutionary placards, or manifestoe, addressed to the people of Spain. Each copy is headed with a wood cut or 'portrait'—as it is termed—of the eldest son of Don Juan, who is entitled and insmed Charles the Seventh of Spain. A question of some interest to Yankees is likely to be presented to the Paris Courts. During the civil war in the United States, a Frenchman of the name of Cluseret took service with the Northern troops, and as he had shortly before quitted ae French army, in which he had attained the rank of captain, he was made a general. He re-cently came to France, and as he is atllicted with the cacoethes scribendi, he took to writing ultra-democratic newspapers, under the signa-ture of General Cluseret. He, in particular, published some articles against the Army bill; and, on account of the title of General, they attracted attention. The government made the military newspapers proclaim that he is nothing more in France than an ex-captain. But he persisted in writing under the name of general. As the military title is highly esteemed in France, and is extraordinarily common in the United States, the government is not disposed to let one of its subjects who may gain it in the States parade it here. So M. Cluseret has been cited bo-force the examining magistrates on the charge of assuming a title to which he has no right in France—an illegal act in this country punishable by fine—and it is supposed that a prosecution will follow. THE PAPAL STATES. Prince Iturbide and the Papal Army. The Roman correspondent of the Nazione says:

"We have had now for some days among us the nephew of Iturbide, Emperor of Mexico, whom the unfortunate Maximillan had adopted as his son, and designated as his successor to the Empire. This young man has enlisted in the squadron of picked dragoons in the Papal army. It is said that he brought with him, and deposited in the highest hands, many documents relating to his unhappy adopted father. But I give this notice with much reserve, for now one may say that with much reserve, for now one may say that there scarcely comes a single person from Mexico who, according to common report, does not bring with him some document relating to the Emperor. Mr. Meredith's speech was clear, eloquent and forcible, and was interpolated by several characteristic sallies of genuine humor and wit, which were keenly enjoyed by the court and the crowd of listeners.

The case was closed by Attorney-General Brewster in a brief but very powerful speech. He alluded to the careful manner in which all judicial power in this country is limited by constitutions and legislative statutes. The power to pardon and to reprieve is distinctly vested in the Governor, and in him alone. The Supreme Court, by direct statute, possesses the power to middly the sentences of the lower Court; but them conform to law. Mr. Brewster ably distinctly vested in the conform to law and the law and the conform to law and the law and the law and modify the sentences of the lower Court, but even it can only so modify them as to make them conform to law. Mr. Brewster ably discussed the point of Mr. Meredith's argument, that a judgment under a rule to reconsider was of the nature of a judgment mist. He instated upon the total dissimilarity of the two cases. He also attacked the argument of necessity, showing that the court possessed the power of suspending sentence until they had time to consider the case carefully. He urged that the jower of remitting sentences had never been conferred upon any Court in this country, and alluded rolled applicable to various reasons why it should not be done. He closed his argument by reading an clouder passage from Lord Camden on the discitlenary powers of the judiciary, in which that distinguished jurist protests strongly against
