I the commission of crimes, like that mentioned by the vitness. It ought not I think to be credited, unless corporated, and wanting in corporation, I feel compelled to reject this charge, as not established by unfailent proof.

A stakement which in itself, as testified to, is an improbable one, ought to be rejected when not forwitselfly other, evidences. Here it is not thus supported, but substantially contradicted. I therefore dismiss this most serious charge from the consideration of the question, and to this conclusion I have come after the most careful consideration.

As between the partices to the proceeding it is equally halanced, one affirming and the other denying the truth of the charge under oath.

This difficulty removed what remains? Nothing that would justify a conclusion adverse to the respondent having, for the present at least, the care and oversight of his children. They have been and are now in the home of his married daughter in the neighborhood of the city. A home in every way comfortable and proper for the children, at which, from all appearances, they are well cared for, and there for the present I propose they shall remain, and from which they are not to be removed except with the approval of the court.

Mrs. Smith must not however, be denied access to her children. At reasonable times she must be permitted to visit them, and to have them to herself, on such occasions, if she desired it. It is right that her offspring should be taught to love their mother, and it depends upon herself whether the legal right to which I have referred shall at a future day be granted to her. If no sufficient cause be shown to the contrary we can do nothing class than concede it. If cause continues to exist it must be denied to her. BY TELEGRAPH. LATER CABLE NEWS. THE LONDON MONEY MARKET. A Man Form to Pieces on the California.

The engineer on the 63/2 train from Trenton, yesterday morning, found the dead body of a man between the two tracks, about six miles south of New Brunswick. The train was stopped, and the body was put on the car and taken to New Brunswick. The unknown appeared to be about fifty-five years old, had gray hair, was clad decently, and wore a soldier's overcoat. His feet and legs were still within his boots, although severed from his body, and lying some distance therefrom, having been cut off just above the boot-tops. His head was also badly broken. There is no Bonaparte that could be trusted as head of such a monarchy, and the youth and feebleness of the Prince Imperial would deprive him of all chance of becoming such head. The representative of the elder Bourbon branch is the Count of Chambord, Jondly called Henry Fifth by the old noblesse and legitimist party. But he is a man of no force of character, and is without an heir. So the legitimists turn to the younger Bourbon branch, the House of Orleans, the beir of which is the Count of Paris, a fine fellow of thirty, who was educated in England, who has shown warm interest in American laffairs, and who has had experience of the standard of the proposed Mr. Allen's calling upon me. At first I thought it was friendship, I at last began to conceive it was friendship, I at last began to conceive it was not altogether friendship."

Taking all these points in connection, they certainly go to show that the coincidence by
