The discoveries of Franklin were made with hardly any apparatus. The first experiments of Sir Humphrey Davy were per-formed, while he was an apothecary's apprentice, with instruments of the rudest description. The pots and pans of the kitchen, says Smiles, in his delightful little volume, styled "Self-Help," and the phials and vessels of his master's surgery, wore remorselessly put in requisition. Heaven's richest blessings; Apollo has_touched your ears with the sweetest melody; Flora is ready to regale your senses with her choicest gifts; and the fair maidens of our city, among the most beautiful and lovely of the land, salute you with their smiles and their approving plaudits. If we have not administered to you the Hippocratic oath, placed upon you the sacerdotal robe, or anointed you with consecrated oil, your office is none the less sacred on account of the omission. You have reached the first goal of your professional life-the commencement of a new era in sional life—the commencement of a new era in your existence—the morning of a new birth of hope and joyous anticipations, gladdening the heart, and inspiring it with new resolves to per-form, with zeal and alacrity, and honesty of aim and purpose, the work that is before you. The cares and trammels of the lecturo-room are at an end; the office of the pupil is shout to be merged into that of the active practioner; and henceforth you are to be your own guardians, advisers, and instructors; in a word, the architects of your own fame and fortune. The new subere upon which you are about to enter offers you every incentive for ex-ertion. To relieve pain and suffering, to pour the balm of hope and consolation into the wounds of the afflicted, to open the eyes of the blind, to restore the hearing of the deaf, to make the dumb speak and the lame walk, to battle suc-cessfully with death, and to smooth the pillow of the dying when all prospect of succor is at an end, is a noble, a God-like occupation, worthy of the most exalted aspirations of the human mind. Fidelity to your profession is your first and most important duty. To be faithful to your trust is to be faithful to yourselves. Honor your profession and your profession will honor you. Exult in its divine origin, in its ancestral charac-ter, in its dignity and grandeur, in its power of doing good. Eschewing everything that is for-eign to it, or that is calculated to impair its dig-nity and usefulness, keep within the attict limits of its requirements, as the only legitimate pro-fession, in the direct line of descent from Hippo-crates, who is as much the common father of as all as Christ is the acknowledged Head of the all as Christ is the acknowledged head of the 550,000,000 of human beings who dally worship at the altar of the only true and living God. The profession which you have this day entered, and to whose service you have been thus formally dedicated, has ennobled itself by vast monuments of learning, science and be nevolence, and has placed the world under undying obligations by scrupulously preserving and porpotuating a pure medicine, based upon pa-tient observation, enlarged clinical experience, and careful induction, and reaching far back into the mysterious depths of past centuries. Mankind know little of the vast knowledge that is required by the physician to run success-fully this machine of ours when disordered by injury or disease. They imagine that it is as easy as to make a chair, to mow a field, or to guide a locomotive along a railway track. They lose sight of the fact that the human body is a living machine, composed of numerous organs and tissues, each invested with important functions, and all united by the closest and the most in timate fellow-feeling. To understand such a machine, I repeat it, requires brains, and to steer it suc-cessfully, when out of repair, knowledge and wisdom of the highest order.

Notwithstanding this, however, the world is so constituted that the success of a young physi-cian often depends more upon fortuitous circum-stances than upon his real merit, or the amount and excellence of his medical attainments. A good address, an agreeable voice, a genial smile, a cordial shake of the hand, go far in securing the confidence of the sick room; and many a young man with little daim to science, to learn, ing, or to intellect, has made his reputation out of these possessions.

Much has been said and written regarding self-Much has been sold and written regarding self-made men. All men that are really good for any-thing are essentially self-made. Some may be more fortunate than others in regard to the ad-vantages of birth, wealth, or early education; but, atter all, everything depends upon a man's ewn personal exertion; upon the manner in which he employs his time and talents, not upon luck, or adventitions circumstances. God helps him. most who helps himself is a trite but true asving. most who helps himself is a trite but true saying, which ought to be written in letters of iron upon every one's forchead who wishes to rise above the composi herd of mankind, and gain an imper-ishable name.

of 1,023, probably mostly caused by cholera, so rife at that hot season. The deaths from pulmonary consumption were 1,947. In Boston, during the same period, nearly one-third of the deaths of adults were from phthisis. The entire mortality adults were from primitis. The cattre mortanty in that city, so distinguished for its medical skill, was 4,379, embracing nearly 1,700 children under five years of sge. It may safely be assumed that fully one-fourth of all the deaths of adults throughout the civilized world are caused by conemption and cancer, both, in the cuisting state of the science, utterly incurable by any means yet devised. In Chicago the deaths from cholera infantum in 1867 were 542, an appalling mortal-ity for a city of that size.

Moreover, the scientific physician does not con-fine bis attention solely to the cure of dis-ease; on the contrary, he strives to make himself acquainted with its causes and methods of prevention. The subject of hygiene has been a prolific source of inquiry for centuries, and must continue to excite a deep interest among medical men, as well as mankind at large, so long; us we are ignorant of the nature and treatment of epidemics, which often sweep. like so many hurreases, over a country, carrying have and desolation into the hearts of the people of the fuirest portions of the earth. Who would not wish to stay "the pestilence that waketh in dark-ncss" or the "destruction that wasteth at noonday?" and who will say that prevention, in such a case, is not better than cure? * * * * rially lightened by the agreeable manners of the medical attendant. The very sight of such a man lie a cordial to the soul, tending to dispet the gloomy cares and unpleasant forebodings. A genial smile, a kind word, a gentle pressure of the hand, a timely anecdote, are often much more effective remedies than quinine and oplum, nay, even than milk-punch and beef-essence. so schionable at the present day in the treatment of disease and injury.

You need not be told that, while you are ex-pected to be men of science, and refined, culti-vated, high toned gentlemen, you are also to be vated, high toned gentlemen, you are also to be carnest working physicians, watching and caring for the sick, standing guard at every avenue where disease may enter and do mischief. The interests of your patients will be paramount to very other duty; nothing must be left to chance; nothing must be regarded as too trivial or insig-uificant when life is trembling in the balance, or usupaded as it were by the morest thread light uspended, as it were by the merest thread, liable o be revered by the elightest mishap. Your mission is one of humanity, calculated to awaken the warmest sympathy, and to call into active exercise the most tender emotions of he soul. I do no violence to my convictions when I declare that physicians are the most hu-mane and benevolent men in the world, and that they perform more charitable acts than any other they perform more charitable acts than any other class of citizens, whatever may be their calling. To feed the hungry, and to clothe the naked, is one thing; to attend, during a long lifetime, the sick, the blind, the halt, and the dying, without pecuniary reward—when that reward might, perhepes, be badly needed for the support of a beloes family—is another, and, in my opinion, far greater thing.

dence in a physician's character, and opens the door more readily and widely to the secrets of the sick room. Moreover, it assists in forming correct habits, and acts as an incentive to study and industry. I therefore most earnesily recommend lt to your consideration. There is no dearth of material; nor is there, so far as my experience enables me to judge, much repugnance, to matri-mory. Many a fair daughter would rather emi-grate to Colorado, Nebraska, or New, Mexico, as the wife of a young, live physician, than remain at home with her parents with a doubtful pros-pect of ultimately bettering her condition. The address concluded as follows: "In bidding you furewell, as I now do, in be-helf of my collecting work works
