FLORENCE BEWING MACHINE

Infant Cordial.

On the 6th of February Admiral Davis, commanding the South Atlantic Squadron, received a note from the U. S. Consul, telling him that a son of Gen. Flores, the Provisional Governor of the Banda Oriental, had driven his father into the country; in fact, created a revolution, the country; in fact, created a revolution, and, I am told, confined the Secretary of War in prison. This son, Col. Fortunato Flores, held a commission as Colonel of the National Guards, consisting of about rix hundred men. The report was that the Colonel had collected all his men and was fortifying himself on the Plaza in front of the Government House. A meeting of all the foreign Admirals was held on board the Eaglish fing-ship Narcissus, to take into consideration what was to be done, and to protect the various Consulates. It was agreed that each nation should send a certain number of men ashore for uld send a certain number of men ashore for the protection of the public buildings, Cus-tom-House, &c., all the forces to roport at the Custom-House landing to Admiral Anguissola, of the Italian flug-ship Regina.

At 10 P. M. Lieut. Commander Rumsey, Second Lieut. R. R. Neill and Ensign L. E. Chenery were ordered to hold themselves in readiness to go with 15 marines and 35 sailors to protect the with 15 marines and 35 sailors to protect the city. We did not move until the next merning, the 7th, and bright and early we were upsecing our men properly equipped and the arms and ammunition in good order. We thought of our last moving upon the rebels, during the war, and all thought some excitement was on hand. At six in the morning we arrived and landed our forces on shore. Lieut-Commander Rumsey reported his force as having arrived, when the Admiral ordered us to take our quarters in a vard of the custom-house. having arrived, when the Admiral ordered us to take our quarters in a yard of the custom-house, the officers having one of the offices. After making the men as comfortable as possible, and sontries being posted, we walted for further orders. Ensign L. E. Chenery handed me the number of men on the ground on our arrival, which was 110 Italians, under the commend of the Italian Cantain effect English as mand of the Italian Captain; afty English sallors and marines, under the command of the Captain of the Nardssus; twenty Spaniards, nader officers from the flag-ship, and fifty Frenchmen, from the Magicienne. Afterwards detachments arrived from all the ships, and at 10 A. M. the following troops were in the yard:

Italians, 160, two cannons, 6-pounders; French, 100; Spanish 80, two cannons, 18-pounders; Roglish, 50, 1 cannon, 12-pounder; Americans, Brazilians, 50.
We experienced some trouble with the sailors on account of some of them getting hold of a case of brandy. But as soon as discovered it was destroyed. The men were drilled during the day at firing, and held themselves in readiness to move at any moment. The court that we were quartered in contained boxes, bales and crates of all sorts of goods. Having sent five of the suitors to the flag-ship for committing offences by breaking into boxes of wines and getting drunk, we found the effect was good, and very little insubordination was detected afterwards.

In the evening we heard a report that Colonel Fortunato Flores had surrendered to his father, and given up his sword, on the condition that he should leave the country, that the men of his regiment should be absolved from all blame, and regiment should be absolved from all blame, and it is said he demanded £60,000. During the night his officers arrived at the Custom House to go on board of the Spanish frigate, confrming the report of the surrender. Early on the next morning the Colonal was escorted through the Custom-House gate, and placed on board of a mail steamer, I am told, for Buenos Ayres. How true his going to the above-named place I do not know. The next morning, 8th inst., the Admirals, finding the affair was over or the grand revolution was the affair was over or the grand revolution was at an end, ordered their men, through the Italian Admiral, to their ships. The American Consul, Mr. Long, was very kind to us, and made us as comfortable as he could with blankets and cau device that he sent us. I called upon him, and found/some few sailors from the Kansas, under Midshipman McIlvane, guarding the house. I found the Consul, who is from Baltimore. He was not alarmed, as he said it was all over now, and that to-morrow the Custom-House would

After returning, the officers called upon each other, and I am afraid very few went to sleep early that night. The sight was very picturesque to see the uniforms of the various nations all together; at one end of the building were the English headquarters, with the fine-looking ma-rine in his red coat walking his post; the Spanish quarters with the Spanish marine, with his wide trowsers of black, and a wide stripe down wide frowers of black, and a wide stripe down tho side, and dight-fitting coat; the Americans with the American flag in the door-way, with the modest marine, but clean, and in good order; the French, with the half-soldler and half-sailor dress of its senuy; the Brazillans very dark, but welking at arms, right-shoulder, and not allowing any of the men to cross the gate; and at the and the Italian Admiral, with his fine-looking staff, and in a very brilliant uniform, very much engaged in giving orders to the different nation. During the night the Colonel was sent to the steamer, and the next morning, after parade and drill, we were ordered by the Admiral to "forward, march:"so all our mess pans, ammunition, arms, &c., were sent to the boat landing, and a sentry was detailed to guard them, until our ships' houts arrived. Moving backwards and forwards to get all the men together, the sun coming full down upon us, and in the closely buttoned and belted coats of the officers, was anything but pleasant. At last our boats were announced as having arrived, and the men moved off in very good order. Our steam launch, and the second launch in tow, were sufficient for all the men. During this time the others were moving off as fast as possible, and very glad that they had not to remain longer in the place.

Thus ended the Revolution of 1868, and I come back from Mt. Joy and seemed very inquisitive about the matter.
