NOW HE RECEIVED A YOUNG ACTOR.

On one morning, a letter was brought in at Southampton street, introducing a young man who wished to go on the stage. Gartick received him bindly listened to his man who wished to go on the stage. Garnek received him kindly, listened to his

But the young fellow knew the manager's weak places. He began, leading off with Foote. The likeness amused the manager immensely, and the performance was repeated. "Hey, now! now—what—all," went on Mr. Garrick "How wealls this which Rudolph S. offered her his heart, in which Rudolph S. offered her his manager immensely, and the performance was repeated. "Hey, now! now—what—all," went on Mr. Garrick. "How—really this—this—is—why, well, well, do all on me on Monday, and you may depend on my doing all I can for you." This broken style of speech was Mr. Garrick's characteristic when addressing his inferiors, and was, in fact, his managerial manner, and may have been found very useful in helping him to a sort of vague generality, without committing him to any positive declaration. It was not a bad auxiliary for one who was asked for so much, to any positive declaration. It was not a bad surfliary for one who was asked for so much, and had to refuse so much.

On the Monday the youth came again, and was welcomed warmly. He was told that inquiries had been made about his widowed mother, and that he was to be put on the books at thirty shillings a week—a fortune and the control of the manufacturers from internal tax, and for other purposes, as passed by the House vesterday, by adopting the report of the Committee of Conference. The following is the act of exempts and purposes, as passed by the mother, and that he was to be put on the books at thirty shillings a week—a fortune indeed. The youth's name was Tate Wilkinson.

Now he helped the needy.

Murphy's family was in difficulties. His brother was going out to Jamaica. His mother was a charge on him; thus, so far as his struggles went, he was entitled to some sympathy. On this renewal of intercourse he had a farce by him, "The Upholsterer," which he pathy. On this renewal of intercourse he had a farce by him, "The Upholsterer," which he began to press upon Garrick, but who was afraid to touch it from its political tone. He soon guessed, however, the meaning of this "stingy" man, who, for his thrift and nearness, was the butt of a hundred jesters, from Foote downwards, sent a private offer of assistance—and "such an offer" as covered Murphy "with confusion." Garrick sent him a supply of money; more, too, should be forthcoming when wanted. "All I desire in eturn is that you will not make any speeches that moment the young man grew depressed much, and all I shall say is, that I am happy t is in my power to convince you how much

Hampton was a charming place; and it is cassy to understand Garrick's delight in it—in its pleasant gardens, where the good and simple vicar would come and take counsel with Mrs. Garrick over the planting of some rare laurel cuttings; and the grounds and flowerbeds, with the distant view of the Shakespeare Temple. Here we can see the host and owner in his natural galety, as Miss Hawkins saw him. Sir John Hawkins would drop in on his road to town; and find the owner and Mrs. Garrick eating figs in the garden. Walpole and his Irish printer, whose fine eyes Garrick would have purchased for Drury Lane at any price, would come over to the Temple with apprepriate verses. Here, too, guests found their way down "to spend the day," and dine, and after dinner wandered in the gardens, and lounged about the grounds. To gardens, the planting printers of the first day of consume more than one hundred and forty-seen kilorsenses. The saving was, thereand dine, and after dinner wandered in the gardens, and lounged about the grounds. To them was present the figure of their host in his dark blue coat, its button-holes bound with gold-edging; the small cocked hat, also edged with lace—and the waistcoat free and open. The face and features were never at rest a moment. He would be sitting on the edge of the table, chatting on grave subjects to a doctor of law or music, when the wonderful eyes, darting to this side and that, would see the little boys of his guest scampering gaily round his garden, and he would shoot away in the midst of a sentence, join them, and be a boy himself in a second.
