Remote the Impeachment inside of ten minimises. The last demand of the Great Impeached was for thirty days in which to prepare for trial. The Senate gave him five days, and now that he has secured it, the time must hang as heavy upon his hands as the two hours of Don Crear rested upon his. How will he employ the time? In making a confession of his official sins of commission and omission, or in the attempts to get up a sufficient defence? Five months would not suffice for that. Would he make his official will? That would be a needless task, for the Senate will arrange all that for him by promptly relieving him of all further presidential cares and giving him permission to retire to Tennessee. Five minutes would have found Stanbery et al. as well prepared as five days will find them ready to make a defence where there is no ground for defence, and where certain conviction and well-merited punishment are foregone conclusions. nian rejoinder to the replication of the Mana-

Government of any revenue whatever from whisky and perhaps to fill the penitentiaries with revenue couraged, and will leave for California ner officials. The remedy lay in another direction. He understood that a case was in preparation to cover the whole subject, and he submitted that it would be better to leave the matter until then, instead of establishing a system of spies upon a legitimate business. The bill was oppressive and mr. Morrill (Vt.) said that not one-eighth of altogether uncalled for to suppose that all distillers were leagued in the fraud. The bill was, however, too stringent. He suggested an amendment, leaving it in the discretion of the Internal Revenue Commissioner to close up distilleries, instead of mandatory upon him.

Mr. Sherman said it was useless to attempt another Committee of Conference.

Mr. Morton (Ind.) objected to the punishment of these fraude as there were eviating laws on mission of the State by Congress, but would pre-Mr. Morton (Ind.) objected to the punishment of these frauds, as there were existing laws on the subject. The trouble was that they were not enforced. He had inquired at the Internal Revenue Department on the 6th of January, and found that there had not been over a dozen persons punished for these crimes up to that time. They might multiply penalties, but until it was made a personal danger to commit such frauds, they could not collect the tax. The cases usually ended in compromises and the payment of fines less in amount than the tax. Such men
