He expresses his desire formation of new railroad companies, also e to approve such a law on the subject as will be satisfactory to the prople, but objects to the ex-lsting bill because of its doubtful constitutionality, and that one of its provisions conveys extraordinary powers. He recites the clause of the Constitution which declares that no bill shall be passed by the Legislature which embraces more than one subject clearly expressed in its title. Notwithstanding this provision the bill, which purports simply to authorize the tends privileges to corporations already in existence. This is certainly unconstitutional. The second objection is, that one of the sections authorizes the railroad companies to increase their capital stock without limit, thus conferring powers which may become injurious to the public, and which are inimical to every clear idea r to a republican government.
