Chess Club consisted of cight of the soldiers, each carrying his long, heavy sword in one hand, and some of them a light fan in the other. After a few minutes spent in salutatious, two of them took their scats at the table which had been prepared for them, and the first game of Japanese Chess ever played in a Christian land (except such as may have been played within the seguriation of the Japanese quarters, since the Embassy reached America) was begun.

The players, one of whom, Yamada Woomagen, Piques and Material for White Waists. E. M. NEEDLES & CO.

The players, one of whom, Yamada Woomagen, was a fine looking man, drew for the first move, by tessing a Ho-het, or pawn, into the middle of the board (a *La Merantile Library fashion), the move being governed according to the side falling uppermost, and the game protected by the advance of the pawns, followed by the different places.

The board and pleces being carefully marked and numbered, we had hoped to make some record of the game, but owing to the game's intricacles and peculiarities, and to the extraordinary rapidity of the play, we were soon hopelessly be-wildered.

As the game progressed it was soon apparent, from the expression on the faces of their companions that one of the players was speedly gaining ground, and they all laughed heartily, but most good-naturedly, when the loser arose from the table, with the simple remark, "He beat me."

This game was not played out to a mate, and they accordingly garred to play another game, the loser in the first game yielding his place to one of his companions. Kioshia when reversed. Has the same power as

RIO-BRIA MA. SHIO. BRIO. BRIO. BRIO. BRIO. MA. BRIA.

This game is played by two persons, with forty pleces (twenty on either side), and upon a chec-quered board of eighty-one squares, nine every way. The board is of uniform color, though the alternate squares might be colored, as with us, for the sake of convenience. The pieces are of a uniform color, as they are used (at pleasure) by uniform color, as they are used (at pleasure) by either party as his own, after being captured from the adversary. They are of various sizes, are long and wedge-shaped, being at the same time sharpened from side to side, in front, and the name of each piece is inscribed upon it—both the original and the one assumed upon being reversed—(as below). Each player distinguishes his men by always having the pointed and thin end forward. But they would be more readily known if the back parts of all were painted with some decided and striking color, as that part of his own men is seen by each player. The pieces (This is decidedly better than the attack result-(A very necessary precaution the threatened B to K Kt 5/) his own men is seen by each player. The pieces are laid fist upon the board, and they capture by occupying the places of the captured pieces.

Names and powers of the pieces:

Oho-shio (king)—centre square, first row. Has the same power as our king, and when oted or checkmated, the game is lost.

Kinishio (gold, or chief counsellor)—upon the first row, and on either of the Oho-shio. Has the first row, and on either of the Oho-shio. Has the same power as the King, except that he cannot move diagonally backwards. A Kin-shio standing at K 2 would be able to move to Q 2, Q 3, K 3, K B 3, K, B 2 and K sq, but not to Q sq and K B sq. It is the only piece, the Oho-shio, of course, excepted, that can neither be reversed or acquire different power.

All the following pieces and pawns may be re-(A sad mistake, at once losing all the fruits of his good play. Kiena (flying-horse)—upon the first row, and on each square next outside the Gin-shio. Has the same move as our Knight, except that it is strictly confined to two squares forward and one laterally. A Kiema standing at K 3 would be able to move to K B 5 and Q 5, but not to K Kt 4, K Kt 2, K B sq. Q sq. Q B 2 and Q B 4.
