the managers was closed, and Mr. Evarts made the same announcement.

Mr. Boutwell requested an adjournment until to-morrow to allow him some time for preparation.

Mr. Evarts stated that Mr. Stanbery had been relied on to make the final argument for the defence, and though he was now rapidly recovering, he would require a short interval in which to acquire strength, and the counsel would now suggest that the adjournment be made to Wednesday.

Mr. Logan requested leave to file his argument, which he said was now in print.

Mr. Sherman submitted an order granting leave to the Managers and Counsel to file their arguments, which went over on objections.

On motion of Mr. Jehnson (Md.), the Coart then adjourned to Wednesday next, and the Senate went into Executive session.

Often Mr and Mrs. Lincoln discussed the relations of Cabinet officers and gentlemen prominent in politics in my presence. I soon learned that the wife of the President And no love for Mr. Salmon P. Chase, at that time recreating of the Tressury. She was well versed in human character, was romewhat suspicious of those by whom she was surrounded, and often her judgment was correct. Her intuition about the sincerity of individuals was more accurate then that of her hushand. She looked beyond, and rend the reflection of action in the future. Her hostility to Mr. Chase was very bitter. She claimed that he was a selfish politician, instead of a true patriot, and warned Mr. Lincoln not to trust him too far. The daughter of the Secretary was quite a belle in Washington, and Mrs. Lincoln, who was jealous of the popularity of others, had no desire to build up her social position through political favor with her father. Miss Chase, now Mrs. Senator Sprague, was a lovely woman, and was worthy of all the sduiration she received. Mr. Lincoln was more confiding than his wife. He never suspected the fidelity of those who claimed to be his friends. Honest to the very core himself, and frank as a child, he never dreamed of questioning the sincerity of others.

"Father, I do what that you would inquire a little into the motive of Chase." said his wife one day.

The President was lying carelessly upon a sofa, holding a newspaper in his hands. "Mother, you are too suspicious. I giveyou credit for sagadity, but you are disposed to magnity trifles. Chase is a patriot, and one of my best friends."

Mr. Evarts said it was of little consequence whether these documents went in or not. They only put in evidence so much of the record as showed the action of the Department.

The question was put and the evidence ruled out without a division, though by the riva ever yote it sounded as though the ayes were in the majority.

Mr. Butler then offered a schedule showing the officers who would be affected by this claim of the President to have, under the Constitution, unlimited power of removal, numbering 41,558.

XLth Congress—Second Seasion.

[Senare—Continued from Third Edition.]

After a short Executive session the Senate, at 2 P. M., adjourned.

Mr. Evarts said they deemed the whole question of Mr. Blodgett's innocence or guilt foreign to this case, and there was nothing in it so far that required that it should be determined here. However, if the Managers were anxious to do so, the trial of Mr. Blodgett could go forward as an episode in this case. They understood that there was a witness now in the city who could swear that Mr. Blodgett was a captain in the rebel service, and they would call him if it was decided to admit evidence on this subject.

Mr. Butler replied defending Mr. Blodgett, who, he said, was forced into the rebel service, and though he did actually go as a Captain of Georgia militia, he could truthfully swear that he did not voluntarily aid the rebellion. The man had been traduced, and he feit it his duty to have all the papers on the subject on file in the department put in evidence here, since a portion of them had been called out and offered by the opposite side.
