MEYER'S NEWLY IMPROVED CRES-EVENING BULLETIN.

Wednesday, April 22, 1868. felt for the character and actions of Mr. Johnson may cause us to overlook some of the very important lessons which the experience of the last few years ought to teach us. This cars," and the result of secret sessions than half as valuable as the same description than the same descripti of the last few years ought to teach us. This are telegraphed to all parts of the country would, in itself, be an evil of great magniwould, in itself, be an evil of great magni-inde; for on the impress which the great long before the pledge of secrecy is removed. London. These facts may afford some en-Inde; for on the impress which the great events of the day shall leave upon our institutions, will depend their stability in the future.

Of all the lessons which we have to learn, anone exceeds in urgency this: that by a defect in our system it is at any time possible that the country may be governed for a term of four years in direct opposition to the will of a majority of the people. If a President, can be seduced away from the party which elected him, he may carry on the government with the aid of a majority of Congress, upon a policy on the government with the aid of a majority of the people, if a president of the discovers his case to be hopeles, as we have every reason to conjecture he will resign and give as his justification for pursuing this course the pleat that he cannot expect justice from the Court of Impeachment.

There is a grave doubt, however, whether Congress should permit the President to reason which he is now placed. If he is impeached, tried and likely to be convicted, his resignation is a likely to be convicted, the resident to hope for a great rise over what are course or a facts to hope for a great rise over what are coursely extravagant prices. New York and Philadelphia are on the high road to become as huge and an appropriate in the heat of a population, we have a likely to hope of a great rise over what are courselved to condemned by the majority of the people, likely to be convicted, his resignation is a is now agitating reforms that her American All-Wool Cassimere Suits. provided only that that minority in Congress is not too small—does not fall below one-third. We saw this happen in the cases of Tyler and Fillmore, but we never saw till nounce judgment, and not permit the criminal nounce judgment nounce judgm now how intolerable might be the evil; we to walk out of court at his pleasure, and so the gallows was the sovereign remedy for Fresh Made and Reduced Prices: judge it by the calamity from which we are now saved, only by the extraordinary and What position would by taken by the Senate Boys', B most unusual fact of having been able so far in such an emergency is not known, but it the present century, hemp-was applied as by the predominant party. course a population of this kind is entirely control than we on this subject. Why should not the heads of departments be appointed by Congress, and hold during in pleasure?

It will be said that this makes a further large deduction from the power of the President; so much the better. When republica are overthrown it is advage by surpraided and the properties are overthrown it is advage by surpraided and the properties are overthrown it is drawing by the spin of the executive, never by assumptions of power by the legislative body. Congress is too directly responsible to the people; elections occur every few months, which, although they may be of the very small, est importance in themselves, are felt most powerfully by Congress; comparatively little by the Executive. Is not this a remarkable anomaly? Congress is so directly proposable to the people that even a local election in a single State may alter its policy, by indicating what is the judgment of the people and the proposed at large upon passing events. The President will not heed these signs. The true policy of the American people is now strongly felt to be a curtailment of Executive power; such further curtailment will encomonacy add to the stability of our institutions.

to the stability of our institutions.

Another course that has been urged is one that would more radically alter our system of government than the foregoing. It is to make the President elective at short intervals; to be chosen from amongst the Senators by the House. Such a step would have much to commend it. It would save us the almost intolerable excitement and pressure of the President election—a-pressure which, at times, becomes dangerous to our safety.

Our chief danger now is that of slipping back into old ruts. A popular and trusted President would tend to make us forgetful of the dangers of Presidential Power, which it pow concerns us so vitally to remember. If we are to remain a Republic we must have I what the grand improvements in progress are less power in any one man. The only stable costing the public treasury. It has become clear that the responsible heads of departments to Congress must be increased, and the Tenure-of-Office bill went a long way in this direction. The President must not only appoint his Cabinet officers by and with the consent and advice of the Senate, but can only remove them under the same conditions. Still this does not go far enough, and the proof is visible in the present state of affairs. Not one of the Cabinet officers, except Mr. Stanton, enjoys the confidence of Congress, and yet the President might keep them to the end of his term, if allowed to remain himself. Nay, if re-elected, might continue them for another four years, even supposing it were possible for Congress to remain as at present constituted.
