The Irish Church Question.Low Dors, May 1.--In the debate in the Horse of Commons last night, Mr. Walpole, in the course of his remarks in opposition to the resolves, says: These attacks on the clergy, such as that of the Irish Church who were noted for the purity of their doctrine and for their elevated learning and Christian zeal, were sure to lead to the most disastrous results.
Lord Elcho said that the introduction of these resolves, and the said clerk at the introduction of these resolved, and the said clerk.

At a late honr, in the presence of a inli honse, Mr. Gladstone rose, and was loudly cheered. He commeted by saying that he could not complain of He commeted by saying that he could not complain of the commeted by saying that he could not complain of the commeted by saying that he could not complain of the commeted by saying that he could not complain of the commeted by saying that he could not complain of the commeted by saying that he could not complain of the commeted by saying that he could not complain of the commeted by saying that he could not complain the say th He commeced by saying that he could not complain of the result of this long debate. These eleven nights of discussion had fully demonstrated that the Irish Church never could fuill the end of its creation. It was not the Church of the nation, it was not the Church of the poor, nor was it a missionary Church. It existed only for the purpose of sustaining political supremacy in a form more hateful to the people upon which it was imposed. This was unindurable; no Minister dared to say it could continue to exist. Now was the time to apply the remedy. The Ministers had raised the question, and bad broached a policy in regard to it, to the fraction, and bad broached a policy in regard to it, to the fraction, and bad broached a policy in regard to it, to the fraction, and bad broached a policy in regard to it, to the fraction fracting fraction fracting fraction fraction fraction upon which they subsequently failed to argue. Our daty now was to accord justice to Ireland. Mr. Glad, Askey Office. stone then, alluding to the personal attack that had been made, denied in the most explicit man ner that he had any connection with or interest in Discussing the arguments, he said two leading objections had been made to his plan—one was that it imperiled the existence of the established Church of England. The other objection was, that the time was income tune. Ten years ago, said Mr. Gladstone, the people MOVERENTS OF OCEAN STEAMERS, of Great Britain were indifferent, and then the of England lay in their own merits, and in the voluntary seal of her votaries, far more than in her connection with the State. He expressed his belief that the Church of England would lose more of her strength even if parted from the State. She had more to fear from her partisans than from her focs, and the reform of the Irish Church would strengthen the Church of England. Disraeli then rose, amid the excited chcers of the House, to reply to Mr. Gladstone and SUN RISES, 5 61 SUN ISETS, 6 54 | HIGH WATEE, 1 close the debate. He deplored the act of injustice. It was an act which involved the confiscation It was an act which involved the confiscation of property and menaced the rights of every corporarization and every person in the United Kingdom.

It inevitally must predispose the public mind for a similar attack upon the Church of England, and it tunde to John F Ohl.
But in spite of the virulence of the press and the pressure brought to bear by the advocates of change, he firmly believed the English people would never sanction the sacrifice of eacred things to party necessities, leading as it was to results only to be described as revolutionary.
The announcement of the result was received with loud and prolonged cheers from the Liberal benches. At half-past two this morning the House divided on the first of Mr. Gladeton s resolves, 320; against the resolve, 265. Majority, 65.
D'Israeli then rose, and, amid profound silence, said: This dealed no actions of the result. D'Israeli then rose, and, amid profound silence, said: This decision so alters the relations of the Ministry and the House of Commons that the government needed time to consider what action it would take.

e accordingly moved that the House adjourn until Monday. The motion was carried, and, at 3 A. M., the House adjourned.
