LETTER PROM PARIS.

Devastation in the Bue de la Paix-Memoval of Popular Establishments -The New Academy of Music-A Coally Picture-Honors to Rossini-

Patti and the Admiring Public. Correspondence of the Philadelphia Evening Bulletin Paris, Friday, May 1st, 1868 .- All Paris is amusing itself with watching the new scene of demolition, or rather devastation, which is being enacted under the auspices of Baron Haussmann, as I mentioned on Tuesday, at the head of the Rue de la Paix, and which is now fairly begun. Of the many operations of the kind carried on of late years, none has excited so much attention as this, on account of its being in the very heart and centre of the fashion and movement of the town. The space being cleared is, in fact, the very choicest in all Paris for fashionable business. The people stand about in crowds all day long at the head of the Rue de la Paix and the angles of the Boulevards des Italiens and Capucines, and can hardly believe their eyes when they see a holocaust of the best known names in Paris, all disappearing from the places they have occupied for a couple of generations at least, sacrificed at last to the rage for improvement. Amongst them are three long standing and favorite Hotels, the Hotel de la Paix, the Hotel de Cantorbéry; and the Hotel de Douvres the last, especially, well known to American visitors, who delighted to occupy the handsome rooms at the angle, with the large windows commanding a splendid view right down the Boulevard des Italiens. The stores which are being dislodged are the most frequented and luerative in Paris. I have already mentioned Tahan, so famous for fancy cabinet-work, trluket-boxes, &c. Then there is the celebrated Boissier, dealer in bonbons and confectionery, and who often takes 100 er 150,000 franes over the counter in a single day, near the time of the Jour de l'An, or New Year. Then, again, comes the samous modiste, Lucy Hocquet, whose window was always crowded with gazers, both male and eme. Another well-known name to all Americans, is Maquet, whose papeterie, fancy stationery, writing cases, &c., are so unrivaled for taste and elegance of design. Add to these the preuises of several first-class jewelers, the immense Bazaar for the outfit of travelers, the American photographic gallery, the premises of Bowles Brothers, the American bankers, and a long list of others,-and you will have some idea of the devastation and dispersion which are going on in the very heart of Paris. It is a regular sauve qui eut. The buildings, which are being fast gutted internally, are now covered on the outside with ong strips of white calico, printed with adverdisements, indicating whither the scattered innabitants have fled for "provisional" shelter. None of them can find again positions equal to the old ones which they have just lost, for there are none such left in Paris; and the grumbling is great, notwithstanding the heavy indemnities paid. Meanwhile a whole army of demolishers are swarming over the de-serted premises, pick-axe in hand, tearing down in all directions and seeming to delight in the work of destruction. And it seems that these men really do have a pleasure in pulling down-A curious fact was told me by one of the parties who has contracted with the city for these demolitions. He assures me that the work of demoli hing has now become so complete a business in Paris, that regular bands of men are now kept engaged for that employment alone, which, firemen, hewing about them right and left with a will. Curiosity is the more excited in this instance, because immediately behind the screen of houses still standing is known to run the long line of new thoroughfare leading straight to the Palais Royal, and which has been driven through one of the most thickly-occupied districts of Paris, just as if a battery of rifled-cannon had played upon it for an hour or two and drilled a hole right through it. When the screen of houses falls this Avenue will come out like a scene in a play, to the great delight of the giddy Parisians. I wish I could speak more favorably of the costly building which is the centre and head of all this embellishment, and for which all these changes are chiefly being made. I mean the New Grand Opera, or Academy of Music. It is ne said, "unfitted them for any other." These men are "let loose," as it were, to destroy, and acquire such a habit and taste for it that they lose all patience for slower employment. And to see them at work one can quite believe this statement. Crowds of people watch them as they scale the walls and roofs like a prodigious construction and has cost a mint of money; it is impossible to say, or to learn, exactly how much, but I think I am quite within the mark when I mention from twelve to fifteen millions as the sum already expended. The effect produced by no means answers to such an outlay; and the general judgment pronounces the lines of architecture to be inharmonious, and the ornamentation to be tawdry and overdon e. There was a report that the celebrated picture by Terburg, of the "Congress of Munster." which, though measuring only some seven or eight inches square, was knocked down to a Paris dealer for 182,000 francs, as mentioned in my last letter, had been bought to go to the United States. The dealer, at first, refused to name his employer, but there is now little doubt that the latter was the Baron James De Rothschild, of Vienna. Both that gentleman and Ba. ron Rothschild, of Paris, as well as Baron Nathaniel Rethschild, formerly of Naples, and now living on the Lake of Geneva, were present in the room during the sale, with a host of other European millionaires.

Rossini was last week waited upon by Chevalier Nigra, the Italian Minister, who presented him, on the part of King Victor Emmanuel, with the insignla of the Grand Cordon of the new Order of the Italian Crown. Mercadante and Verdi are to receive the Cross of Commander of the same Order. There was quite a little incident the other evening with Patti, at the Grand Opera. The performance was to be an act of Don Giovanni, with a second rate singer, and afterwards the Traviata. with Pattl. When the curtain drew up for the Don Giovanni there was a general call for Patti to appear as Zerlina. This she consented to do; but being already dressed for the Traviata, she did not take the trouble to change, but came on to the stage in the costume of the latter character. To her intense disgust she was greated with some bleses, which so distressed her that she retired to the side scenes and began to cry, and the curtain fell amidst great emotion. There was a long pause. But Mile. Patti refused to yield or reappear in the Don Gie canni, which was therefore dropped; the Fraviata began; Patti came forward with her eyes looking rather red, but soon sang both herself and her audience into good humor again.

When Hamlet was played for the last time yestorday evening, at the old Grand Opera House, with Nilsson, now almost a rival of Patti, the receipts reached about 15,000f., the largest ever known. The 22 performances of the same piece have brought in 252,000f. Another theatrical statistic tells us that the Belle Helene, Barbe Bleue, Vie Parisienne and Grande Duchesse, after a thousand aggregate representations, have realized nearly 31/4 millions. Theatricals are decidedly flourishing in France, though not of a very elevated or elevating character.

The Emperor has been himself to-day in person to visit the immense demolition above mentioned at the head of the Rue de la Paix. It has been just decided, I hear, that the new thoroughfare leading thence direct to the Theatre Français shall be called the Avenue Napoleon, after the reigning Sovereign.

CRIME.

Mysterious Disappearance in Pitts-burgh---A Merchant Supposed to Have Killed Himself. Have Killed Himself.

(From the Pittsburgh Dispatch of the 13th inst.)

Since Sunday evening last, Mr. Jacob Lies, a dealer in dry goods on Ohio street, Allegheny, has been missing from his home, and facts have been revealed which justify the conclusion that he has committed suicide by drowning. Mr. Lies was in excellent circumstances, aged about 39 years, and resided with his wife and five children in a portion of the building in which his store is increted. He came to this country twenty-five located. He came to this country twenty-five years since, from Darmstadt, Germany, where we understand all his kindred are at present living. the was successful in business, widely known among the citizens of Allegheny and vicinity, and was generally liked by his neighbors. Since Sunday evening nothing was heard of him until yesterday morning, when his clothes were discovered lying on a raft in the Allegheny river, some distance below the Hand street bridge. They were easily identitied by the authorities, to many of whom Lies was personally known. In one of the pockets was found a book containing papers, receipts, &c., which was also known to have belonged to

It is rumored that the missing man was prompted to commit suicide by a recent attack on his reputation. He had been accused of a gross crime of which he is believed to be entirely innocent.

An Absconding Swindler Caught. The Paris (Maine) Democrat, of May 8th, says: "John R. Smith, who has been a Methodist preacher at Bath and other places, having re-cently recently absconded to Canada with a large cently recently absconded to Canada with a large amount of funds, the proceeds of hay which he had bought on an extensive scale the past fall of tarmers in Pownall, New Gloucester and Freeport, was caught in the French country, in Canada, last week by officer C. M. Wormell and brought back. "Smith bought largely the year before, and paid up, by which he got a good credit, and this year he went in about $7,000 worth, giving paper for his purchases and decamping just before it matured. A Boston detective was sent after it matured. A Boston detective was sent after him, without success. Wormell got on his track through the movement of Smith's family, whom he traced to Compton, Canada. He persuaded Smith that he had better come back and settle with his creditors than be arrested and lie in a Canada jail till a requisition could be got. He gave good bends to the men who employed Wormell, and was set at liberty. Other creditors had him re-arrested, and he will probably have to diegorge his ill-gotten gains.

"Smith was a Universalist preacher at North Fryeburg awhile—then joined the Methodists, and was assigned to Pownal, where he preached over a year. He was expelled from the Conference by resolution, and afterwards attempted to presche a college in the church of West Rath." create a schism in the church at West Bath.'

Said cards were issued to both "rebels" and "Yankees, "formerly "federals. Who would accept, what they would wear, and whether or not the weak-kneed could muster up sufficient moral courage to go or stay at home, furnished an ample theme for the gossip, and kept those who did accept busily preparing their tolets during the forward must know dear intervening time. For you must know, dear, kind reader, that Atlanta is neither New York nor Paris, and that party-goers labor under great disadvantages and inconveniences in preparing for such a grande fête as Gen. Meade's entertainment was. Eh bien! The week passed away like all earthly things, the tollets were completed, and notwithstanding wind and storm and rain tout le monde was determined to brave all things to attend this grand military was dark and gloomy, but about ten o'clock the sun burst forth in unusual; splendor, betokening promise of a brilliaut day, in which we were not disappointed. Having arrayed our selves in the most gorgeous tollets we arrived at the General's residence at precisely nine o'clock, where "sounds of revelry by night" greeted us from the magnificent military band attached to these "headquarters." The grounds were beautifully illuminated, and the aforesaid band was stationed in the front yard, regaling the guests with music according to printed programmes. Upon arriving at the first entrance we were directed to proceed to the rear of the house, where we proceed to the rear of the house, where we stepped from our carriages into an impromptu hall, built, carpeted and lighted for the occasion, so that our feet did not touch the ground. We then preceded to the stairway, preceded, followed and surrounded by enough "orderlies" to make us all orderly, and where another orderly announced in the most stentorian voice, "Ladies and gentlemen please walk up stairs—ladies to the front room on the left and gentlemen to the back room on the left." We gentlemen to the back room on the left." We obeyed orders, and upon ascending the stairs opeyed orders, and upon ascending in status were received respectively by femmes chambres d'Afrique in the ladies dressing room, and the General's staff in the gentlemen's room. Having freshened our cruehed skirts, taken a partial n the mirror, dusted our coats, &c., we des

Each lady and gentleman being furnished with said cards we then proceeded to the front parlor, where General Meade, dressed in full uniform and looking his "level best," received us in true royal style. Having paid our respects to the General commanding the Third Military District, the gentlemen then seemed busy is silling up the ladies' cards for the dances which were to en-sue. This commissed some little time, but finally at a quarter to collect the dancing finally at a quarter to ton o'clock the dancing commenced.

The music for dancing was furnished by another and most delightful band, which belongs to the Thirty-third Umited States Infantry, now stationed at this post. This band sat upon the front gallery, which was shut in by canvas so as to make it portectly private, while at the other end was a table filled with iced punches, sherbet, &c., with which the guests refreshed themselves between each dance; while in the hall was a table filled with boiling cofe noir, which was at the service of "one more unfortunate" the whole evening. The ladies were all heautifully dressed, and the gentlemen all looking magnifique in their military uniforms, this being of course a compliment and courtesy to the Gental Whose all the ladies were lovely it would magnifique in their military uniforms, this being of course a compliment and courtesy to the Gentral. Where all the ladies were lovely it would not be fair to discriminate. At twelve o'clock precisely supper was announced; the dancing ceased, and we marched in to supper, keeping step to the delightful music, the tables were beautiful and the luxuries which met our eyes and tempted our appetites would have brought an intense smile of satisfaction from Luculius himself, while Bacchus, in sipping the exquisite wines, might easily have imagined them the nectar of the gods. Let it be recorded that we entered the arena spread out before us with all the sang froid of successful combatants, and came out none the worse except for the supper tables. A charming feature of the supper was that all present could take supperjust where they were, in the halls, on the stairways, in the salons, on cosy little mess tables, thus avoiding the crush of the dining saloon and the discomfort of standing so long. The General expressed frequent and sincere regrets at the absence of the lovely and elegant Mrs. B.— R., declaring always that it was her party, and that it was too bad for her to be detained at home by illness. Mrs. B.— is the magnanimous, generous and hospitable Southern woman who threw open her doors to General Meade upon his arrival in our city, and introduced him to our Southern people, for which kindness he feels traly grateful and never General Meade upon his arrival in our city, and introduced him to our Southern people, for which kindness he feels truly grateful and never permits an opportunity to pass of evincing his gratitude. The people of this district owe much to General Meade for his justness and firmness, and all must admire and respect the unflinching manner in which he performs his duty, being governed by a conscientious regard for what he believes to be right. Aside from this he is socially delightful combining a suariter this he is socially delightful, combining a sucreter in mode with a fortiter in re rarely met with. The hours drifted—flew—unnoted by until a faint streak of dawn in the east admonished us to pay our adjeus to our delightful host, as well as to tender him our thanks for the enchanting night. Good nights being said, farewells spoken, we took our departure for "home, sweet home."

The Pope.

The Pall Mall Guzette learns from a correspondent at Rome that the Pope has lately given several general audiences to foreigners, receiving a thousand and fifteen hundred at a time. He has also delivered several discourses, two of which contained political allusions. In the first he spoke of the evils inflicted on the church by certain rulers, the Herods and Pilates of the day while the tendency of events was to expand and magnify the Holy See, bringing all men and all countries round the tomb of St. Peter. In the second discourse the Holy Father distressed his audience by his melancholy presentiments, and by reminding them that as David, though attended by a band of faithful and devoted friends, could not be saved from exile and the life of a fugitive, so the affection borne to himself by a few faithful Catholica tion borne to himself by a few faithful Catholles could not preserve him from the trials which Heaven had still in store for him. This mystorious language was thought to have been inspired by unfavorable communications from foreign governments.
