He quoted the provisions of the Constitution giving the President the right to appoint, and instanced the case of the removal of Timothy Pickering by the elder Adams, as an instance of Pickering by the elder Adams, as an instance of the constitutional construction and the practice under the laws. He said it has been argued that even if this right of removal by the President may be supposed to exist during the recess of the Senate, it is otherwise when that body is in session. I am unable to see the grounds of this distinction or to find any records for this distinction. grounds for this distinction. The Constitution nakes no such distinction, as it says nothing about removals. Frequent instances have oc-curred where the President thought proper to re-move an officer at once before sending the name of his successor, and prior to the act of March 2d, 1867, I found never his right to do so scriously questioned. He says, judging from the short experience we have had under the law of 1867, the supervisory power of the Senate over removals is purely calculated to secure a removal in the secure a re

Me concludes his argument on the subject as follows: As Mr. Stanton was appointed to hold during the pleasure of the President for the time being, and his tenure was not affected by the act of March 2d, 1867, the President had a right to remove him from office on the 21st of February, 1868, and consequently cannot be held guilty under the first article, and even if I were not satisfied of the construction given herein of the act of 1867, I should utili hesitate to convict of a high misdemeanor for what was done on the 21st of February, 1868, because it was the mere issuing of a written order, and failed in accomplishing the act intended, and it would be an abuse of power to depose the President on the letter of authority to Gen. Thomas he concludes that as the President had a legal right to remove Mr. Stanton, he had a right to designate Gen. Thomas to discharge the duties of the office ad interim.

Alluding to the speeches of the President in relation to Congress, he asks is the President and the fundamental principles of government.
