THE ENGLISH RADICALS. John Stuart Mill Defends Goldwin

To the Editor of the London Daily News : Bin-I have just seen some statements in an article of the Quarterly Review for this month, headed "The New School of Radicals, concerning Mr. Goldwin Smith, which, as I happen to know Goldwin Smith, which, as I happen to know them to be untrue in every particular, in the lot-ter and in the spirit, I take it upon myself to contradict. The remarks on Mr.Goldwin Smith's public character, speeches and writings, like those upon the supposed inconsistency in my own, I make no observation upon, be-cause everybody has the means of indiving for the supposed inconsistency in my on card time. index upon the supposed inconsistency in my own, I make no observation upon, because everybody has the means of judging for himself whether they are true or not. The passage I wish to refer to is as follows:
"He has even announced his intention of turning his friends console us in an amusing aside by assuring us that he does not mean it.
'I am going,' cries the principal actor; "but not if you elect him to parliament,' whisper his friends one of the audience. The little play reminds one of the audience. The little play reminds one of the same stream are gone completely.
All the bridges on the same stream are gone completely. All the bridges on the same stream are gone completely. All the bridges on the same stream are gone completely. "Now, in the first place, or from "turning bis back upon an unthank". to his native land, the others stand by to tell us his price for remaining. "Now, in the first place, so far from "turning his back upon an unthank-ful country," I understand Mr. Goldwin Smith to have intimated that he does not leave this country for good, but will probably return at some future time. Secondly, I heartily wish it were true that the reformers of this country, by electing Mr. Goldwin Smith to a seat in the reformed House of Commons, could induce him to relinquish his intention of establishing himself, for a time at least, in another country; and his determined rejection of their proposals is deeply to be re-gretted by all who can appreciate his talents and principles. But it is within my knowledge that bis price for remaining. "Now, in the first place, so far from "turning his back upon an unthank-ini country," I understand Mr. Goldwin Smith to rejection of their proposals is deeply to be to the greated by all who can appreciate his talents and principles. But it is within my knowledge that this proposal has been made to him from more than one important constituency, and I have been myself the metric through which the liberals of a metropothis proposal has been made to him from more than one important con-stituency, and I have been myself the me-dium through which the liberals of a metropose liter operatives a set with a desword to litan constituency have value endcavored to induce Mr. Goldwin Smith to concent to be put have been distorted from a compliment into an accusation would be very offensive if it were not very ludicrous. But as the characteristic bold-ness with which the distorted statements are put

The Paris correspondent of the Independance Belge writes: "I learn from a good source that a new political work is in hand at the imperial printing office. I do not know the purport of the new manifesto, for it is kept a profound secret. But we must not carry expectations too far. The remembrance of the Titres de la Dynastic Napoleonienne should inspire caution. But I may say this—the more france will be thankful, for there exist certain currents of infuence which cause appreheusion. If the Europer only knew the feelings of this people, from whose hearts many an illusion has been tora, the sincerity of its love of peace by abundoning those armsments which disquiet men's minds at home and zbroad.
