Professor Morton's New Lecture. -- As "good wine needs no bush," so by parity of reasoning Professor Morton's new lecture on Light ought to require no special notice from us to secure for it a large audience. All his lectures at the Franklin Institute on scientific subjects, which he has there handled, have filled the large which he has there handled, have lifted the large room to overflowing, for he is a very pleasant speaker, and has a singular faculty of making obscure things plain, and dry themes attractive. But the new lecture on Sunlight seems to promise special interest, if its synopsis is to be carried out.

The subject itself is one of great novelty and attraction. The apparatus employed seems to be varied and imposing, and the grand proportions of the Academy of Music afford a splendid arena of the Academy of Music afford a splendid arena for the display of diagrams, luminous experiments and fine effects of color. All Philadelphians should feel a lively interest (as many have already shown they do) in this lecturer and his labors. He is a Philadelphian, educated in his labors. He is a graduate of our university; our schools, a graduate of our university; during Professor Fraser's absence, in the same institution in which he was a distinguished pupil, and has already earned for himself an enviable reputation for singular ability ir his line of philosophical labor. It is a pleasant sight to see one of the graduates of our time-honored university, which has produced many men of mark, moving on modestly but steadily, and with marked success, to a position which is reflecting great credit on the acle forofessors who have helped to train him and develop his genius, and reaching at an early age that reputation, both at home and abroad, which is rarely attained before matured lite, and long years of patient and successful labor.

While still a pupil and student of the University he was the principal author of a work on the "Rosetta Stone," which ran through a second in a few months, and is now sought for in vaiu. Since then he has been conducting the Journal of the Franklin Institute with such marked success that its whole fortunes have changed, and from being a burden to the Institute, it has become and promises to be an increasing source of revenue to its proprietors.

We frequently meet with favorable notices of Ont.

We frequently meet with favorable notices of Professor Morton's lectures and improvements in scientific apparatus in the French and English journals, showing that his reputation is widespread and well established.

We heartily wish him continued success, and are glad to do anything in our power to promote his welfare. Hence our present notice of the proposed lecture.

THE NORTH BROAD STREET PRESBYTEREAN CHURCH-AN INTERESTING OCCASION.-The ninth anniversary of the Sunday Schools connected with the North Broad Street Presbyterian Church was celebrated last evening. The handsome church structure at the corner of Broad and Green streets was crowded by the children and their friends, and even the vestibules were througed by persons who were unable to obtain standing room inside. The pulpit was surmounted with an their friends, and even the vestibules were througed by persons who were unable to obtain standing room inside. The pulpit was surmounted with an arch of evergreens bearing the words: "Welcome Friends;" and as the floral offerings were handed in by the little children, they were so arranged as to form the word "Love." The scene, with the children in their holiday dress, was exceedingly beautiful, and the exercises were of the most interesting character. Not the least attractive portion of the ceremonics of the evening was the presentation of testimonials to pastor, teachers, and other officers of the church and congregation, and as many of these were floral offerings, the air was heavy with perfume. A number of clergymen were present. Mr. B. B. Crawford presided at the organ, and Mr. Thos. Rawlings was the musical director.

The sceretary's annual report showed that in the year 1859 there were 63 children attached to the Sabbath-schools, with an average attendance of 31. Now there are 380 children, with an average attendance of 260. In 1859 there were 8 teachers, and now there are 40; and in that year there were 112 volumes in the library.
