Arrival of a Steamer. The Late Harriet Livermore. [From the Bridgeport (Conn.) Standard, May 22.]
Those of our readers who are familiar with Whittler's poems, and especially with his beautiful Idyl "Snow Bound," will recollect the graphic portraiture interwoven in his description of the firested circle of a New England home, and commencing with the lines.

mencing with the lines: Another guest that winter right Flashed back from lustrous eyes, the light— Many have been the conjectures whether this sketch had an original in real life, or was the simple creation of the author's genius. The writer of this was informed by Mr. Whittier, that the likeness was drawn from nature, the subject being a lady, the recent announ subject being a lady, the recent announcement of whose decease has suggested this reminiscence. This lady was Miss Harriet Livermore, of an aristocratic and wealthy family of Philadelphia. She died in that city a few days since at the advanced age of 81 years. It is said that an enfo separation from the object of an early attach-ment, through the authority of her parents, gave an eccentric development of an intellect otherwise brilliant and well balanced, the result of which was a career remarkable for its romantic What Chase Is To Do adventures. She became more particularly an enthusiast in religious matters, and became a firm believer in the early restoration of the Jews and the second coming of the Saviour. Some thirty or forty years ago, we believe, she promulgated her views on these subjects, in public lectures throughout the country, addressing audiences of the first respectability and culture, in the principal cities of the Union. So intense was her devotion to these ideas, and so implicit her faith that the time had arrived for their realization, that she visited Jerusalem on three different occasions, in ler to be present and witness their consumma tion. The last of these journeys was made when the had attained the age of seventy years, and

The government of Austria refuse to answer them. The report then gives further details of the evidence taken, quoting a despatch_from W. W. Paris, May 25 .- The grand prize of Paris, the Warden, the President's stenographer, to Woollev, telling him that those who are most confident of conviction were not those most conversant with the inner workings. They give extracts from the various suspicious telegrams to and from Woolley and Hugh Hastings, who is styled "The Albany Party," and vho was to come on for business. Sunset Cox also appears, by the report, to have wanted in connection with impeachment, and was telegraphed for from New York. Cox tes tifled, after much dodging, that various schemes for the purchase of Senators' votes with money were broached to him, with which he refused to have anything to do. He advised Collector Smythe not to have anything to do with the scheme of a money, proposed to undertake to procure the votes for acquittal of four Senators. The names of thece four were not given in the report. Mr

Butler explaining that this was only an interlocutory report, and the names for that reason Ram Stonewall to retain possession of the vessel | were left in blank. Cox's testimony embodied in the report is quite long, and shows, beyond doubt, that there was an attempt to purchase votes, in which he was wanted to assist, and in which Webster.
