The Republican Senators, however, had been in consultation for a couple of hours before been in consultation for a couple of nours before that time, on the question whether or not the vote on impeachment should be taken to day. The general impression throughout the city was that the question was to be decided in the negative, and a few minutes before 12 o'clock the intelligence reached the reporter? colleck in an atelligence reached the reporters' gallery in an uthentic form that the agreement was to postone the vote on the remaining articles of peachment for four weeks. The galleries were filled, but from the cause indicated, there was not by any means the same pressure to obtain admission as there had been on the last occasion, when the vote on impead ment was expected. It was remarked that many of the spectators had furnished themselves with printed lists of yeas and nays, in order to check off the vote. The proceedings were opened with prayer by the chaplain, who invoked divine approval of the action of the body, and that that action would conduce to the best interests of all classes of the people.
