TO A CAGED CANARY. What subtle pulse is in thy blood, Poor bird, that teaches thee to sing, That tells thee that the fair-eyed Spring Igain to these rough shores is wooed i How dost thou know that skies are fair, How dost nou know that are the correspondence of the correspondence of the correspondence of the second sec I know that home-bound swallows flit Across the opal of the sky, My brain is servant to my eye; But how hadst thou a hint of it? How canst thou know that ash-buds swell,

That violet peep in sweet surprise, By what sense dost thou recognize The Spring-song of the crocus-bell? I am uper idea of thy voice : For, barred from all that makes the Spring To human the ablessed thing, Thou dost unwearingly rejoice. I learn a lesson, bird, from thee:

Shame, were my-song less glad than thine, When Spring with all her wealth, is mine, and the wide world's aglow for me. ---TELEGRAPHIC SUMMARY.
