to minister and parish.

The majority of the laity, and here and there a clergyman, deprecate the mention of money in connection with the relationship between pastor and church. It is, forsooth, so mique, so sacred as to be out of the range acting as a member of an ecclesiastical caucus which was discussing, among other items, the annual stipend to be paid a new paster, who adjured the session never to believe that the amount of salary they should offer yould influence in any degree the decision of the favyned andidate. Let not noily the amount of each minister's salary be published abroad, but also the rates of house rent, domestic service, schools, markets, &c., in the town, and the income tax of his parishoners. If he has incurred debts for his education, his library, the recovery of his health, give them the benefit of printer's ink. Recently in a country parish near us a clergyman actually offered his entire salary to any householder among them who would board him and his small family. As no one was willing to do this for the sum offered, I suppose the mercenary creature either took a clerkship or went to some more remunerative parish.

Why, if you will were a foot man, and had no expectation of justice from them, you would—at least after a little experience—receive them as a many is a minister is obliged to do. Those few dollars are little compared with the man's rightful due, but they may purchase a new life-least for his worn-out self or his wite, or supply some absolute need. He learns to bow his thanks courteously, and tell his thoughts to no one but his God.

But these gratuities are often given in earnest affection, and with gracious delicacy—this I can testify after much experience and observation; but better far that they should be rendered needless and unknown.
