Oh the blissful meeting of lovers true, Against whom faith has done all that faith could And then dropped conquered:--while over Dead years of anguleh, parting, and pain.
Hope lifts her banner, guy, gallant and fair,
Uniainted, untorn, in the balmy air;
And the heaven of the future, golden and bright,
Arches above them—God guards the right!

But oh for the meeting to come one day, When the spirit slips out of its house of clay; When the standers-by, with a pitying sign, hall softly cover this face of mine. And I leap—whither, ah! who can know? But outward, onward, as spirits must go; Until eye to eye, without fear I see God, and my lost, as they see me.

THE JULY MAGAZINES.

The July number of Harper's, though well mixed, has no great wealth of originality. One of Mr. Newman Hall's sermons is selected and printed at length, some historic details of "New York in the Revolution" are looked up and feebly illustrated with minute with gold and silver. The existing remains confirm substantially the descriptions of the woodcuts, the works of late African travelers are boiled down into an article on "The Fashions in Guines," "David Garrick" is written up to introduce two or three copies and for similes of British origin, and an inand fac-similes of British origin, and an in- order of Santo Domingo in Cuzco adm telligent paper on Street Pavements lends all | me as an honorary member of their brothe ita weight to the advocacy of wooden-block hood, gave me a cell to myself, and per-cartways of the Nicolson or Stafford order. mitted me during the week I spent with them The freshest solidest, most informing and most toothsome contribution is described by the take our graph my fill.

The former splendors of Cuzco were narrated in dazzling terms by the Spaniards who conquered it; but, remarks Mr. Squier:

"All the cities they conquered were grand and populous, and the state of their princes dazzling, even to men who had seen the Alhambra, and knew from historic poetry the glories of the Moors. In many, perhaps in most, respects—it may be in all—Cuzco was the most impressive city they had found in all the Americas. That it had barbaric wealth of gold and silver, and stately structures, we can well believe; for this is confirmed by concurrent evidence and existing remains. But that it ever contained much more than its existing population appears to me improbable. All students of American early history and archaeology are well aware that the Spaniards never erred in underrating their enemies in story, whatever they may here doe not not fact. Neither Cortez, nor Alvarado, nor Playra of the proposal contents of the cortes of the Canceldo or cockpit, is in the court of the proposal contents of the cortes of Santo Arrange of the Moors, whatever they may here doe not not be successing the content of the proposal co done in fact. Neither Cortez, nor Alvarado, nor Pizarro, ever encountered inferior numbers in their wars. The hosts that confronted the Union armies at Bull Run and some other places, and that led President Lincoln to affirm, as the result of the best information he could get from his generals, that the Southern army was made of "nigh on two million of men," were insignificant, numerically, as compared with those that d one in fact. Neither Cortez, nor Alvarado, on two million of men," were insignment, numerically, as compared with those that the conquistadors tell us they encountered. We know that Leonidas fought in the shadow of the hurtling arrows of the Persians; but the legions of Xerxes were small that those that the count occurs, the earth of which, including their own dust, had been dug up to form the walls of the cancha. The fights were well attended by the clergy, the judiciary and the military. I had the good mals, birds, reptiles and insects, all in the same precious metals. That the inner walls begged a week's pay in advance, magnetic and that the inner and outer cornice, a yard broad, as Garcillaso says, were of gold, is not incredible; but that the gardens of the temple, extending over an area 600 feet long by nearly 300 broad, were thus covered with gold and silver exceeds belief. Not that the ancient smiths did not sometimes imitate natural objects with considerable skill, for of this we have abundant evidence, but because the Incas seem to have been a race of remarkably good sense, and eminently practical and utilitatinn in their notions and practices—too much so, I am induced to believe, to have gold worked up in imitation of firewood, and piled away in the temple! There exist in Cuzco. In some of the private museums, portions of the golden plates with which the walls of the Temple of the Sun were covered. There is hardly a doubt of their authenticity. They are simple sheets of pure gold, beaten expanded the property of the conditions and practices—too in some of the private museums, portions of the golden plates with which the walls of the hardly a doubt of their authenticity. TEMPERANCE ORGANIZATIONS .- The cause of TEMPERANCE ORGANIZATIONS.—The cause of temperance in Camden city, and in fact, in many other parts of the First Congressional District, appears to be rapidly and satisfactorily advancing. At the recent meeting of the Grand Lodge of the Good Templars, held in Camden, it was stated that the Order was first introduced into New Jersey in 1866, and the first Grand Lodge was held in Vineland last year. At that time there were ten Lodges, with a membership of 473 persons. Since that time, in the space of one year, the order has increased in the State to 33 Lodges and 12 Degree Templars, with over 2,000 members. This Order is accomplishing much good in the cause of temperance. Worth at Par..... Clem. Tingley.

SENTENCED TO HARD LADOR.—On Saturday William Hanna, whose sentence had been postponed, was called up before Judge Woodhuli for final action in his case. He stood charged with, and had pleaded guilty to eighty-three indictments for forgery, &c., of bonds, checks, and promissory notes, amounting in the aggregate to about $70,000. After addressing the prisoner in a suitable manner, showing the enormity of the crime of which he stood confessed, the Judge proceeded to sentence him to an aggregate im-JNITED FIREMEN'S INSURANCE COMPANY OF PHILADELPHIA.
