The Alkaline, Region of the Plains. A correspondent of the Chicago Tribunc writes of the country west of Laramia, on the Pacific Railroad: "From Laramie to here the country is very miserable and very curious. Here and there a patch of buffalo grass may be seen, but rarely anything else. The banks of the small streams glisten with white where the alkali water has evaporated. Almost all the medication of the streams of the stream and the streams decord of the streams of the streams of the streams disten with white the stream and the streams decord of the streams decord of the streams of the streams decord the stream stream decord the stream d small streams here are impregnated with this alkali. It renders the water almost uscless for all practical purposes, but it produces some very queer effects, as the workmen on the road and visitors can testify. If one drinks much of it the same effect is produced as if a strong dose of, salts is taken. This greatly disgusted the workmen when they were forced to drink it. "Nor can this water be used in the engines with any effect; the steam it makes has no power. The water expends itself in froth

This has been a great source of annoyance, and is one of the worst obstacles that the road has to overcome. Another peculiarity of this water is the effect it produces on the skin of those who wash in it; it roughens the skin of the hand, just as a cold wind chaps it in winter. It also peels the skin from the face, so that a person who uses this water has a new skin about every seven days. This is especially the case where soon is used in has a new skin about every seven days. This is especially the case where soap is used in washing. The graders west of here, where the alkali in the water is much atronger, say that when soap is wanted for washing clothes, &c., they put some grease in the alkali water, stir it up with a stlok, and there is soap. Naturally it costs but very little, and when freights are reduced on the road it is proposed to supply the whole-United.
