A gentleman possessed of a noble Newfollowing account of the submarine race which took place in Boston. The Saturday Evening Gazette gives the following account of the submarine race which took place in Boston Harbor on the 4th inst. Among the most attractive and novel features of the day's programme was the Submarine Exhibition given in the harbor under the immediate direction of Mr. G. W.

Townsend, the gentleman who is engaged in blasting out in the channel. This being an entertainment entirely new to all, it naturally entertainment entirely new to all, it naturally attracted a very large concourse of both seexes, and was probably witnessed by 10,000 people, who were assembled in multitudes upon the piers, on both sides of the harbor, on the decks of ships, steamboats and tugs, while hundreds of smaller craft, gaily decked with bunting, were drifting about in the vicinity of the submarine track, all of which were densely crowded with men and women, anxious to see "what they should see." While engaged in watching the preparations that one morning, on his way from market, he came upon two dogs fighting. With the same feelings that will make the crowd of human dogs throng about a prize ring to see two other dogs pound each other, Bowser paused, and for a second looked on; then, excited by the contest, he dropped his basket and 'went in.' He whipped both, but while so engaged a hungry hound stole his steak. Bowser picked up his basket; the loss of weight told the story. He stopped and investigated. The steak was gone, and BROWN, BROTHERS & CO., anxious to see "what they should see." While engaged in watching the preparations that were being made to get the submarine "walkists" in readiness for their tramp, the entire party seemed to have forgotten that part of the programme was to be an explosion under water, and as if glad of the opportunity to startle and surprise those of the company who were afloat, Mr. Smith, the electrician, without any warning, communicated the without any warning, communicated the electric spark to the twenty kegs of powder idea had struck him, he set off for the market he had previously sunk in the channel, when again. The little crowd followed him. They terrific explosion took place, throwing a saw him approach the butcher's stall, but inlarge volume of water from rinety to one hundred feet into the air, while the whole looked wistfully at the meat. At last, when surface of the water, within a radius of a the butcher's back was turned for a second, hundred feet of where the explosion occurred he seized the largest steak on the block, and was most fearfully agitated. This was a grand debut for the performers, and added largely to the interest that all were manifest.

The divers being duly equipped in their armor, lay quietly hanging over the gunwales of their attending boats, looking more like submarine monsters than they did like "walkists" contending for a prize. Precisely at 11 o'clock and twenty-five minutes their heads disappeared from the floating stage. heads disappeared from the floating stage, introduced through the pretex, of a story, is which was anchored a short distance from well known to many of our citizens, having the head of Long wharf, and the men started been in office here under Government. on their perilous transp of 2,100 feet to a like stage, which was anchored off the Cunard Out at Columbus, in Ohio, lives a little, stage, which was anchored off the Cunard docks on the East Boston side. It is alleged that the prisoner set fire to a lot of straw in the lott of the Pennsylvenia Hose Company's house, on Eighth street, below Green, on the morning of the 4th of July. He was seen, a few minutes prior to the discovery of the flames, climbing out of a back window on to a one-story structure, and then into a yard adjoining, from which he got to the street, and then went to the hose house. Before reaching the door he was informed of the fire, and he communicated the fact to those in the building. The Alderman considered the testimony sufficient to warrant him in sending the case to a jury, and therefore committed him. The accused asserts that he is innocent.

Slovenliness in Spain. An English writer remarks: The first thing that strikes an English lady in all foreign countries is the absence of neatness, and of that domestic privacy which some of us carry to excess. It is nothing to us that fereigners do not feel the want as we do, that there is nothing incongruous to the Spaniard in the mixture of pomp and squallor, which the English resident finds so repulsive. It may seem strange to us that the courtyard of the Palace at Madrid should be worse payed than any stableyard in should be worse paved than any stableyard in a dilapidated house in England, and that heaps of rubbish should be left in full view of the the family wash hanging out to dry over the drawing-room baleony of the handsomest houses in Madrid, we are struck by a painful sense of the scandal such a sight would cause in Loudon.
