Tariff But in the House-Presou of its Passage-Meerhead La-oring flard to Rush it Through, but is Fellow-Republicans Appear Apathetic-Judge morrill's Report on the Protective Policy, and the Warehous. pg System-Proposition to Abolish warehouses for Imported Goods.

washing on July 6, 1868.—True to his pro-Manuale on Friday last, Mr. Moorhead called the tariff bill to-day in the House, and ale of the Whole to take up the bill, no quom could be got to agree to its consideration, so committee rose, and Moorhead had the inexsaible mortification of asking the postponeent of the subject for the present. There were not more than four or five Democrats in the House, all the others being in New York, attending the convention, so if the House had really desired to take up and pass the tarif bill, no better opportunity could have been found. But the excessively hot weather, been found. But the excessively hot weather, and the general unwillingness to discuss such a dry subject with the thermometer above 90, seemed to produce a sort of apathy among the Republicans, who had the matter entirely in their own hands. The day selected was unfortunate, succeeding a national holiday, with many friends of the measure absent, which neutralized the advantage that might have been gained by the absence of its opnonents. Among those absent sence of its opponents. Among those absent were Judge Morrill, and several other Pennsylva-nia members who are warm friends of the bill, but when it is called up again in a few days, there will be a determined effort to pass it.

I was gratified to see Judge Kelley, of your city, in his seat again, to-day, for the first time, since his late indisposition. He looks in fine condition, and did all he could to get the Tariff bili considered to-day, but without success.

The most remarkable instance of vitality, however, is that of Thad. Stevens, whe, with his increasing years, seems to remew his strength and energy. He is a regular attendant at the House, creasing years, seems to renew his strength and energy. He is a regular attendant at the House, notwithstanding the excessively warm weather, and the fact that he has to be carried from his carriage to the Hall in a chair. When once in he moves around considerably, and takes an active part in the debates. He sits on a chair to the left of the Speaker's desk, and occasionally a glass of lemonade is brought in to refresh him, which he sips lejarrely all the while hearing a glass of femonade is brought in to refresh that which he sips leisurely, all the while keeping a sharp look-out as to what is going on. To day there were frequent calls of the House to ascertain whether a quorum was present, on which occasion the Speaker appoints tellers, who stand in front of the Speaker's desk, and all the members pass between the tellers, and are counted as they pass through by each teller. Those in the affirmative always vote first, and those in the negative last, and this little episode is an agreeable relief from the tedium of sitting for hours without intermission in the proceed-ings. To-day it was difficult for Mr. Stevens to leave his seat and pass around with the more active members, so he playfully called out to Judge Spalding, of Ohlo, to vote for him by passing through the tellers, which the Judge did passing through the tellers counting the vote upon a several times, the tellers counting the vote upon a nod of approval from. Stevens: The intellect of the old man seems bright and clear, and he will doubtless live a long time yet to take part in the active struggles which are now opening upon us. UDGE MORRELL'S REPORT FROM THE COMMITTEE

ON MANUFACTURES.

Judge Morrill, Chairman of Committee on Manufactures, has prepared an elaborate report upon the protective policy and the warehouse tem, which has been printed, and is ready to tem, which has been printed, and is ready to be presented to the House. The report is a very able document, and has been prepared with great care, and displays deep research and untiring industry. It sets forth that the protective policy is sanctioned by public sentiment—that it was the policy of the early statesmen of the country—that protection should be the policy of all industrial nations, which is evidenced by the manufacturing supremacy of England—that this policy is justified by experience—that it affords a market for agricultural products, and is a boon to consumers.

The report exposes very fully the present archouse system in existence in our country, warehouse system in existence in our country, which is considered a great evil, as under that system a reservoir of goods is accumulated to be poured upon the market at the first sign of improved prices in domestic products. If there is a rise in prices in New York, the first advantage is taken by the foreign agent, who lies in wait in the ambush which the confiding government has built for his sally point. If the opinions of practical men are to be relied upon, it is impossible to oversettimate the evils inflicted upon our practical men are to be relied upon, it is impossible to over-estimate the evils inflicted upon our home trade and production by this policy, which is not merely one of favor to the foreigner, but of positive hostility to our own industry.

The report has a bill appended, the first section of which is designed to impose some restraint upon the quantity of goods entering the warehouses, by compelling the foreign exporter to designate the purpose for which the goods are entered, whether for exportation or consumption. At present our business communities have no more of knowing whether the goods in wareholds. ns of knowing whether the goods in warehouse are impending over their own markets, or are merely in transit to other ports. The greater eccurity which will be given to our home markets, by compelling the designation proposed is, in the opinion of the committee, a sufficient recommendation for the provisions of this section.

The second section provides that upon the withdrawal from warehouse of merchandise for Consumption there shall be paid, in addition to the duties and charges, interest upon the amount of the duties on such merchandise from the time of entry until the withdrawal of the same for consumption. The remaining sections provide for regulations to carry the act into effect.

RETIREMENT OF SPECIAL AGENT GATES.

Capt. E B Gates, of Pennsylvania, and formerly of 5th Regiment Pennsylvania Reserve

Corps, in which service he lost one of his legs on the Peninsula, has been acting for nearly a year past as a Special Treasury Agent in Virginia, but his commission expired a few days ago, and he will not be reappointed, as Commissioner Rollins does not feel disposed at present to make reapdoes not feel disposed at present to make re-ap-pointments, as there is a probability of the whole force of inspectors and agents being legislated out of office under the new tax bill. Capt. Gates dis-charged his duties in a manner entirely satisfactory to the Department.

DELEGATION FROM THE WHISKY TRADE. On Friday last a delegation of the heaviest dealers in distilled spirits in Philadelphia, consisting of Henry Hannis, Alexander Young, Joseph F. Sinnott, William Anderson and Samuel Mackey, waited on the Senate Committee on Finance, and through their representations the period for withdrawing distilled spirits from bonded warehouses was extended from six to twelve menths, six months being the time fixed by the House. An Extraordinary Curiosity.

The Montreal Gazette says: A wonderful old document is at present in Canada, being nothing less than the skin or parchment signed two hun-ted and thirty years ago by the Scottish people id known as the "National Covenant of Scot-and." The substance of the deed is written in a the signatures of the noblemen (including the liamous Montrose) and many of the others are bey distinct, as also are those obliterated in the blood of their subscribers, while the whole parchment is in a good state of preservation.

This celebrated old document is, without doubt, a relic of the troublous times which gave it existence. No era of Scotland's history claims more interest to present greater the barry doubt, a relic of the troublous times which gave it existence. No era of Scotland's history claims more interest or presents greater charm than the memorable year 1638, when, on the 1st day of March, its vigorous and high-minded people, oppressed by restrictions on their religious liberty, and roused to resistance by the attempts of the King and his ambitious prelate to violate their consciences by forcing upon them a liturgy utterly opposed to their Presbyterian notion of simple weekip, rose up en masse, and with unanitality of views and feelings unparalleled, subscribed the National Covenant of Scotland. The Covenant survived the crisis that called it forth. For the following fifty years, the principles which produced a generation of heroes, found their noblest exponents in the lives and sufferings of their sons. Purified in martyr blood, they triumphed in the cause of the lives and sufferings of their sons. Purified in martyr blood, they triumphed in the cause of freedom, and left a legacy to succeeding generations, which to us was never more sensibly enjoyed than in the present age.

For the past seventy years the document has been in the possession of a family of the name of Henderson, into whose grandfather's hands it came when he was the senior Cameronian Pastor in Sectland.

The existence of the document is well known in the United Kingdom, where in most of the principal towns and places it has been shown.

Prregularities of the Compass. The French Academy of Sciences has received a curious paper from M. Arcon on the cause of the perturbations to which the magnetic needle is subject on board iron ships—a circumstance which has led to numerous accidents. The author of the paper states that there are three disturbing elements. In the first place, soft iron exercises an attraction on the needle, acting with equal intensity on whichever of the two poles an attraction on the heedre, acting with equal intensity on whichever of the two poles is alternately turned to it; this double effect is spontaneously destroyed when the compass is a great distance from the metal, because then, both poles being influenced simultaneously, they neutralize each other. In the second place, fixed magnetic centres are accidentally formed either in different parts of the hull or of the bodies lashed to it, such as cannon, anchors, &c. Here again the various centres balance each other; but it is not so with the third disturbing element, the magnetism inherent to the iron hull itself. The latter, being formed of pieces closely riveted together, may so considered in the light of a single continuous sheet influenced by the magnetism of the globe, so disturbined as to be altogether independent of all shape; and its resultant may therefore not coincide with the ship's orientation, and hence the cide with the ship's orientation, and hence the perturbation, which M. Arcon proposes to neutralize in the following way: Let the hull be divided into two parts, by the interposition of a non-magnetic body—copper for instance; then two poles will be formed in each of less intensity than the original copes. than the original ones, and neutralizing each other's action by couples. It might, the author thinks, be sometimes useful to make also transversal sections with the non-conducting body, besides the longitudinal one, namely, the neutralization of the finid by the formation of several independent magnets destroying each others,

Letter from Thomas Carlyle. The following letter has been addressed by Mr. Carlyle to Dr. Hutchison Stirling, late one of the candidates for the chair of Moral Pailosophy in the University of Edinburgh: "CHELSE, 16th June, 1868.—Dear Stir ling:—You well know how reluctant I have been to interfere at all in the election now close on us, and that in the election now close on us, and that in stating, as bound, what my own clear knowledge of your qualities was, I have strictly held by that, and abstained from more. But the news I now have from Edinburgh is of such a complexion, so dublous, and so surprising to me; and I now find I shall privately have so much regret in a certain event—which seems to be reckoned possible, and to depend on one gentleman of the seven-that to secure my own conscience in the matter, a few plainer words seem needful. To whatever I have said of you already, therefore, I now volunteer to add that I think you not only the one man in Britain capable of bringing metaphysical philosophy, in the ultimate, German or European, and highest actual form of it, distinctly home to the understanding of British men who wish to understand it, but that I notice in you further, on the moral side, a sound strength of intellectual discernment, a noble valor and reverence of mind, which seems to me to mark you out as the man capable of doing us the highest service in ethical science too; that of restoring, or decisively beginning to restore, the doctrine of morals to what I must ever reckon its one true and everlasting basis (namely, the divine or supra-sensual one), and thus of victoriously reconciling and rendering identical the latest dictates of modern science with the capilogs described of wirdow among the earliest dawnings of wisdom among the race of men. This is truly my opinion, and how important to me, not for the sake of Edinburgh University alone, but of the whole world for ages to come, I need not say to you! I have not the honor of any personal acquaintance with Mr. Adam Black, late member for Edinburgh, but for fifty years back have known him, in the distance, and by

of the circumstances, you judge it suitable to read this note to him—to him, or, indeed, to any other person—you are perfectly at liberty to do so.

Yours sincerely always,

M. Emile de Girardin sometime in May complained that he received one day his copy of the Moniteur only at eleven o'clock; and he made certain strictures upon the manuer in which the official journal of the Empire was conducted. M. Dalloz, the director of the Moniteur, thereupon replied to M. de Girardin, by a letter published in La Liberté, which gives some interesting facts. M. Dalloz, who has had charge of the Moniteur for thirteen years, says that the publication of the debates in the Legislature, the morning after the day on which they took place, and in extenso, is what is done by no other paper in the world. The American and English press print reports, and often entire speeches, the morning following the delivery— but those papers are not, like the Moniteur, obliged to produce the debates terally and completely. At nine o'clock in the evening the orators of the day, whose speeches are to appear in print in a few hours, arrive at the office of the Moniteur, and very often at daylight some of them have not finished their corrections. These corrections done, for the sake of exactitude the speeches are again reviewed by the stenographist who has reported them. On the evening preceding the day when M. de Girardin complained of the tardy arrival of his paper, M. Thiers was the man who caused the delay; for at half-past seven o'clock in the morning he was still in the printing office. where he had passed the night revising his speech, which was of about a dozen columns. -Paris Cor. French Opinion of the Burlingame Mission.

Translated from Embassy has arrived at Washington and will be officially received to-morrow by Mr. Seward and the President at the White House. A fact much noticed by the diplomatic body is the carnestness of the Russian and British Ministers to tender their velcome greeting, they having made the trip expressly to New they having made the trip expressly to New York, without waiting for the Embassy's arrival in Washington. M de Stoeckl assured the Hon. Mr. Burlingame on the part of Prince Gortschakoff that he would receive a most cordial recep tion in St. Petersburg, not only as a representa-tive of the Chinese empire, but also as an Ameri-can citizen. It is impossible to be more cour-
