

ARTISTS.

Powers, the sculptor, has made 500 busts since 1838. Mr. Brackett, of Boston, is at work on a life-size bust of Anna Dickinson, which is favorably spoken of.

Bayard Taylor, when last at Rome, opened a studio, employed models, and went through a regular course of art instruction. In the elaborate and brilliant criticism of Mr. Holman Hunt's painting, "Isaiah," in the "Fortnightly Review," the following anecdote occurs: It is interesting as throwing curious lights upon the artist's conscientious industry.

A tendency to revert to the surprises of the eighteenth century has begun to appear in Paris. You may remember there was not a garden in those days without its machinery borrowed from the stage. If you walked in one direction you set a fountain to play which drowned you, or you made a sedate estate rise, or you fell into some pit. The Dutch especially were conspicuous for the laborious ingenuity of these arrangements, and I believe they have never ceased to be popular in Holland.

THE MONUMENT TO LUTHER AT WORMS.—The inauguration has just taken place, witnessed by the King and the Crown Prince of Prussia, the King of Wurtemberg, the Grand Duke of Baden, and other members of the royal families of Germany. The concourse of strangers was immense, and reports speaking of one hundred thousand, and among them many clergymen.

"On a syzygic pedestal of subdued color, surmounted with two bronze graces, stands Luther. It is the stout, sturdy shape familiar to every eye. It is the dear old familiar form, with its honest features, and calm, imperturbable eye, as painted by Cranach. With face turned upwards he rests his clenched fist on the closed Bible, as if reading of his beautiful chorale, "Das Wort ist unser Leben."

"And as the total effect is, the best critics agree in regretting that the artist who devised the work did not live to see it completed. Rietchel, who in 1856 was commissioned to make a model of a figure, modeled the statue of Luther and Wickliffe alone had been carried out. The rest were modeled from his sketches by Heron Schilling, Donndorf and Kietz, his three, and Frederick the Wise, Elector of Saxony, and Philip Melancthon, Jerome Savonarola, and Jan Huss. Then turning to the circumference, you notice seven more statues distributed around. Occupying the four corners of the balustrade, and separated from the center group by the inner space, are the venerable figures of two regal and two clerical allies of the reformator hero, Frederick the Wise, Elector of Saxony, and Philip Melancthon, Jerome Savonarola, and Jan Huss. Then turning to the circumference, you notice seven more statues distributed around.

The alarm being given, the officers of the prison and the village firemen promptly responded to the call, and to their indefatigable exertions and to the fortunate fact that there was little or no wind, it was ascribed this fortunate result, that the fire raged for a short time in the prison yard was not destroyed. The cabinet building, three-stories high, is entirely destroyed.

By removing him to a cool, shady place, applying cold water or ice to the head, and administering food and water, and cold water, or other stimulant. In the other and more fatal form of this affection, a different set of symptoms show themselves. Here the patient suddenly falls to the ground, completely unconscious. His skin is pale, his breathing hurried, convulsions are not uncommon, and, if proper treatment be not promptly resorted to, death soon takes place. In this case also, the patient should be promptly removed to a shady and cool spot, perfectly private, so that the crowd may be kept off without fail. His clothing should be stripped off and his whole body should be rubbed with ice from head to foot, and pieces of ice should be kept under the armpits. This should be steadily persevered with until the patient is restored, or until a doctor arrives, or until it is plain that he is beyond recovery. This treatment has been found to be so eminently successful by one of our best physicians, that he feels justified in saying, from his own knowledge and observation, that if applied promptly recovery is almost certain.
