LONDON, July 4th: 1868 .- In my irregular series of letters Dresden has been the subject of four epistles, in which the Church, the great Melsen china factory, the smoke concerts and the general household arrangements have been accurately if not fully described. There are but three things left of which I can speak with interest, and they will conclude my "Dresden Experience." First-The condition of the lower classes. It would be impossible to convey to a people like the Americans, who, in every station of life, consider themselves at least human, an idea of the degradation of the low Germans. In the streets of Dresden, a city of one hundred and thirty thousand inhabitants, I frequently saw a woman and a large dog harnessed together in a coal-cart, the woman bending her back to the burden, her arms hanging down till she appeared like an animal with two useless legs dangling before her, and her brutish countenance devoid of all indication of intellect or soul. Sometimes two women: sometimes a woman, a man and a dog; always the woman with the dogs. At the end of the journey, often through 'snow a foot deep, a mat was laid down, and the dog slept upon it, while the woman shoveled away the snow, filled baskets with the coal, shouldered them, carried them up three and four pair of stairs till all the load was emptied; then, waking up the dog, she walked into the harness and dragged the cart home again. Think of it-a woman!

their Freasures.

Probably I have told you as much as many will believe, but I saw more. A woman sawing wood, while a man smoked his pipe, waiting for her to finish, and allowing her to carry it up stairs herself : and I have seen a man riding on a cart that two women and two dogs were pulling. America is young, but in points of civilization she is far in advance of Europe-not of Germany only, for Paris and London might sit at her feet and learn lessons of courtesy that would put in the shade all their French politeness and English dignity, in which the real respect and regard for women have no part. I speak of them in their home relations, not as we travelers meet them on equal ground. What American city with one fourth the number of inhabitants of Dresden, where music, the fine arts and general education are so highly appreciated, would ever tolerate such degrading street scenes as women doing the work of beasts and men? Enough of a dis agreeable subject.

The royal palace of Dresden is the most ungainly pile of heavy architecture in Europe. Yet it has great attractions to the lovers of art in the frescoes in the throne-room by Bende mann, and in the ball-room are some very fine paintings, the subjects principally from the mythology and lives of the ancient Greeks. On the ground floor is a range of apartments called the Green Vaults, from the color of the hangings with which the chambers were originally decorated. In these green vaults are such treasures o wealth that one feels in walking through them as if he only possessed the ring of Aladdin, and some slight mischance might cause the magnificent sight to be instantly dispelled. Before the discovery of America the Freiberg silver mines were the source of the great wealth of the Saxon Princes. Although the Saxon King is now the poorest in all Europe, in the very walls of his palace are treasures and costly objects more gorgeous and dazzling than any other monarch possesses, handed down from reign to reign since the time of Augustus the Strong, in 1724. There are exquisite carvings in the precious metals. One is an equestrian statue of Charles II. of England, in the character of St. George, cut out of a piece of colid cast-iron. In this same room are bronzes of rare workmanship, one a crucifix by John of Bologna. In the ivory room are several wonderful pieces of carving. One is a cup carved out of a single piece of ivory only sixteen inches high, on which are 142 figures, illustrating the story of the Foolish Vir gins, the Fall of Lucifer, and the wicked angels. Each face is a distinct portrait, and it is said to have taken several years to accomplish the work-In the third room are Florentine mosaics, objects in amber, paintings in enamel and engraved shells and ostrich eggs carved and ornamented with jewels and rare gildings. In the fourth room are the gold and silver-plate that adorned the banqueting tables of the Saxon palace in the older times. Each goblet and dish is a wonder of costiiness and ingenious art. The fifth room glitters with vessels formed of the half-precious stones Lapis-lazuli, chalcedony, agates, and rock-crystal, as well as two goblets formed of antique gems each valued at six thousand dollars. A most curions collection of caricature figures of men and animals made of single pearls are found in the sixth room. The largest pearl in the world, a pearl the size of a hen's egg, cut into the famous court dwarf of the King of Spain, is one of these royal toys. In the seventh are the suits of armor, studded with diamonds and gems of every description, some of the regalia being literally made of diamonds, rubics, emeralds, sapphires and pearls. In the last and, eighth apartment are treasures that years of labor and mines of wealth furnished, the most splendid gifts for kings and princes. One trinket cost $58,400, and employed an artist eight years in making it. After all, it is only a toy, representing the court of the Great Mogul the Emperor Aurenzebe, scated on his throne surrounded by his guards and courtiers, in the costumes described by Travernier, the expression of each of the hundred and thirty-two figures in pure gold enameled being distinct and excellent. The tent, throne, steps, terraces of the ground, are all of gold, the whole standing on a pedestal about two feet in diameter. Dinglinger, the court jeweler at Dresden, was the artisan, who was twenty years employed in similar beautifut but uscless work. In the room where these articles are displayed, such masses of diamonds. the largest in the world, the famous black dia mond, the largest sardonyx known, 61% inches long and four-and-a-quarter broad, sapphires, the largest", gift from Peter the Great, Martin Lither's two rings, a mass of solid silver from the Freiburginines, and the Saxon Regalia, of which the buttons, collar, sword-hilt and scabbard are all of diamonds; the green diamond or brilliant, weighing one hundred and sixty grains, is amongst them. The only lime any of these treasures are used is when at the reception of ambassadors from foreign courts, the King, Queen, the two Princes and their Spanish and Portuguese wives, anray themselves in jewels from head to foot and aftray tubenesses in jeness who figured "years and years ago." The assaults with intent to kill are not reported. Of the 938 murders, 460 whites and 370 freedmen were killed by whites, and 10 whites and 48 freed-men were killed by blacks-leaving 48 cases un-known. Goldwin Smith.

Mr. Goldwin Smith, newly chosen professor at Cornell University, Ithaca, N. Y., writes the following stinging letter, recently published in the Manchester Guardian and Times:

"Sir :--- A friend, solicitous for my reputation, has sent me a paragraph from the hon-don Standard, in which I am accused of 'having subscribed to a fund on behalf of the contriver of the Clerkenwell explosion."

"My friend appears to think that as the charge is 'specific,' it may call for some reply on my part.

"I beg leave to say that I am in the habit of passing over the charges of the Standard, however specific, with the same silent contempt with which I treat the torrent of foul language in which they float. I am ready, and feel it a duty to my friends, as well as to myself, to render an account of my conduct whenever it is challenged by decent and responsible accusers. But I should only degrade myself and do a wrong to society by bandying words about my character with writers whose habitual weapon in political controversy is personal slander, and to whom the restraints of veracity and honor are un-I am, &c., "Goldwin Smith." known.

A "Radical Poet,"

Among the Black Republican ranks is now placed Victor Hugo. The Journal of Commerce stoops to attribute the heated words of the Guernsey Oracle to a nameless Radical. leaving the inference to be drawn that the opponent of negro woman-hanging is an American. All for party!

"We are reminded of this incident by an account of the sensations of a Radical poet, on learning that a negro girl in Kentucky had been hanged for murder. The tenderhearted philanthropist, in view of such cruelty, exclaims: 'Was there not manhood enough left in Kentucky to tear out the tongues of the fiends who pronounced judgment on that girl, and to break the arms of those who were base enough to carry out such a sentence?' What touching tenderness of emotion is here!"

Accident to Swinburne.

Accident to Swinburne. On Friday afternoon, 10th inst., the occupants of the reading room of the British Museum were startled by hearing a violent exclamation of pain followed by a heavy fall on the floor. It was soon ascertained that Mr. Algernon Swinburne had fallen from his seat in a strong convulsive fit, and was violently struggling. He was also bleed-ing profusely from a wound on the head. Assist-ance was instantly at hand, and the sufferer was held down for a few minutes, and then removed for air to the passage outside, under the care of the held down tor a tew minutes, and then removed for air to the passage outside, under the care of the superintendent of the room. Two medical men-happening to be in the room, they at once pro-ceeded to ascertain the extent of the injury; but the only wound was a slanting one on the right -temple, immediately over the eye, of about an-inch and a half in length, and down to the bone, from which the blood flowed freely. In about half an hour Mr. Swinburne had recovered suffi-cient consciousness to be placed in a cab and cient consciousness to be placed in a cab and taken home. It appears that he was sitting at the end of the P-Q avenue, and in falling struck which the tables are moved.
