The session was more for executive han legislative business. The rotunda and all parts of the Senate wing of the Capitol were lighted. At least a hundred persons, interested in the matter of appointments, were congregated at the main door of the Senate, making frequent inquiries of every one who was supposed to know anything about the basiness in which they were severally interested.

The President has been duly informed of the action of the Senate last night with regard to appointments. He to-night nominated to the Senate Alexander Cummings, of Pennsylvania, to be Commissioner of Internal Revenue; Simeon M. Johnson, to be Assistant Secretary of the Treasary; William N.
