| Will. Mollerus, | Fr. Tiedeman, |
| Mr. Rockey, upon taking the chair made a brief speech. | |

General Carl Schurz was introduced and received with great enthusiasm. He spoke as follows:

Ladies and Gentlemen, my Beloved Countrymen:

It gives me great satisfaction to be received by you with such feelings of love and respect. It gives me great satisfaction to see so many here to-night, to follow my discourse with attention and of the day.

Your chairman tells me that my audience is a mixed one, and that many Democrats are present, eager to hear and to see me. Let me, gentlemen, to tell them that I respect the principles which they cherish, and if they are honest Democrats, I shall respect them as I respect mine. Stating this I beg leave to declare, and with perfect sincerity, that if in the course of my remarks I should speak disparagingly of the Democratic party, it is not the individual I mean, it is not the Democrat in propria persona, but, gentlemen, it is the principles of the party which are developed in this country.

Gentlemen, is there one single man amongst us, no matter if Republican or Democrat, who does not wish peace? Is there one who does not feel disgusted and the damages and losses incident to it—tired of the whirlpool in which our social existence has been involved for eight weary years? I, for my part, feel tired, I want peace; a peace well settled; a peace everlasting; a peace opening new resources to this great people, and giving us a higher moral existence. But, gentlemen, to have peace, we must must annihilate the cause of war. If you want peace in your family you work out the cause of your domestic tribulation. The country, being a family on the largest scale, must do and act the same as you; it must blot out the cause of disastrous conflict—the cause of war.

And what was the cause of the war? Slavery! To establish an everlasting reign of slavery, the South sprang to arms; for the safety of slavery one part of this country deluged the whole with blood. For slavery, slavery! the noblest blood to be blotted out; and, thanks to our martyr President, the emancipation proclamation [tremendous cheers cheering, the whole assembly waving their hats] abolished property.

Slavery abolished, something had to be set in the place of it; and what could be set in the place of it? The system of free labor! "Hear, hear!"

If America had a government like Russia has—and thank God or whom you will—the question of abolition would have run smooth and easy. The Emperor would say, the serfs shall be free, and they shall be released from the fetters of slavery, and it would have been done, as actually it was done.

But we have no Emperor. The power and privileges of sovereignty rest with the people at the polls; and the people, naturally selfish, which is the people to be entrusted with the Government finally? To the laborer, to the man who must be in the employment of a white man; if found without such employment, no matter how long, he should be arrested and sold at public auction to the highest bidder for 9 years.

Mississippi made the law that denied to the negro the right to acquire real estate.

Louisiana made a law that every negro who had not enlisted before the fifth of January of each year should be arrested and sold at public auction for the ensuing year.

For God's sake, tell me, gentlemen; tell me, Democrats, are these free-labor laws?

The people of the North, therefore, had to take the development of free labor at the South in its own hands, and that is what Congress did.

Congress had first to declare the negroes free laborers, have to vest the natural right to self-labor to the highest bidder, without any compulsion whatsoever. But because that the Southern rebel aristocracy never would submit to it, Congress gave the military power in hands of the loyal people. Now that the system of free labor is introduced down South, the military is called back, and Congress, instead of the military, gave the ballot to the negro, to defend his right of free labor against his white employer.

Eight States of the South are left to self-government. The people, composed of aristocrats and laborers, have to look for themselves; and that one party may not encroach upon the privileges and rights of the other, this cannot be done except by giving the ballot into the hands of the laborer to defend him against his employer. Is that right or wrong? [Slight "Right."] Does it make a difference that the laborer in the South is blackfaced instead of white-faced? ["No!"]

Gentlemen, the Democrats try to accomplish the reverse of this, and declare the proceedings of Congress unconstitutional. Now, I am not a lawyer or a prosecuting not in their favor which the Democrats did not pronounce unconstitutional at one time or other? You remember the time when party feeling ran high and the South tried by itself to resist the abolition of slavery with the force of arms, [Applause.] Then the Union was sundered. It was James Buchanan, who declared that it was unconstitutional to secede, but that Congress could be found no power within the precepts of the Constitution to coerce seceding States.

What the Government of the United States had not the right of to carve itself? The very first, the highest natural law, is to defend its own existence. A government not possessing that at last is no government, and will—the Democrats and old Jack Hickory, Webster, Calhoun, John Adams and all the other great statesmen who composed the Constitution, and whose memory you can hear at every Democratic gathering, had been much blessed as a party—have declared it indispensable, the inalienable right of a government to defend itself, has a question.

Is it a right? Is no government at all; that the secede at will. Would you like to see your country really this right. Will they make us believe that there will be and agencies and wells, and all government matters, collathered in their law studies, and history, and philosophy, and even the history of past centuries, had created a government without the right to defend its own existence? Preposterous!

Now, suppose the Democrats had been right, picture only the consequences. Instead of the Union, we would have had a conglomeration of petty principalities, and the people would be disembroiled in a war amongst themselves, and would have changed the republican form into the most atrocious despotic one. Centuries would have passed over the people headed which would have raised the cry for Republicanism again.

The Democrats tell us that the negroes at the South are too ignorant, and I feel, my dear gentlemen, that in fact, they are so. But did not the Democrats ever refuse a vote on account of the ignorance of the voter? Hear, hear, laughter.] Gentlemen, we have got to vote for one or other. (Renewed laughter; cries of "That's so.") The Democrats say, the negroes are not fit to vote; we only do they not refuse a vote on account of ignorance, but they want it deposited twice, and the ballot box stuffed. [Laughter.] Gentlemen, let us look on negro suffrage, gentlemen, with an unbiased mind. Negroes are ignorant, more so than whites. But, gentlemen, is there a way to depart from votes unintelligent the principles and consequences which will be produced from giving slavery? Not that, for we believe that even the wisest of men cannot. Universal suffrage proclaimed by Congress to-day, and that is the great boon it bestows on a republican government. Is equality every where? Is it considered the foundation of republicanism, and of the existence of a republic? Is not universal suffrage, is indispensable to a republican form of government.

But suppose the negroes had been possessed of a right of voting by the year 1860, and the Southern people had voted for Union without slavery and for conservatory with slavery, do you believe the secret would have been kept? Democracy? Most certainly not; and now, sir, consider the results of the miserable secession doctrine has instigated all over the country; the thousands who fell victims to the war of secession; the thousands who are impoverished and ruined; the debt which is now crushing the people by taxes. In the name of God and of everything which is dear to the people, Democrats, do you not believe that the poor, ignorant negroes would have rejected his vote more wisely than the enlightened, elegant Southern secesh statesman? "Yes, yes!" Hurrah! Applause and emotion.

The Democrats threaten negro supremacy. Ay, before the war, it was a frequent boast of the Southern aristocrat that one Southern man could whip five Northerners.

There are in the present million of whites at the South, and three and a half millions of negroes; how is it then that these boastful Southern freesters, who could whip five Northern men even without getting much hurt by it, are now afraid of a negro? Is it possible that nine millions would run—possessing all the vast estate of the South, its influence, its warlike, wealth—and overcome by three and a half millions of negroes in rags, having for their arms, and fighting for their lives. Does it not seem, gentlemen, that if the negro at the South were the dangerous savage and monster such beauty odds, he must be entitled to the highest respect; nay, that he must be superior to our selves?

But it is all mere bosh, and the Democratic leaders know it, and use it only to dust the eyes of the masses.

The Democrats tell us that business is dull and money scarce, and that this is the result of Republican misrule. Business is depressed, certainly, we all feel it; and can it be otherwise? Think a little, gentlemen. Suddenly the country is sound, able-bodied men, in the prime of life, have during five long years done nothing but destroy; they destroyed powder, lead, leather, clothing, provisions, [Cheering, &c., and applause.] Excuse yourself if it be possible that the country can be as rich as it was before. That destruction can be merged.

We have a heavy debt; which must be provided for; but who caused this debt? Did we cause it? Is debt which was made to save our government, or did they cause it who tried to destroy it? The South offered its life for our life. War cannot be waged without money, and the South borrowed from Russian took good care that we should not find a single dollar in its treasury. Well, we had to borrow, but whoever borrows must agree to pay a good deal.

Remember 1802. Our armies had been destroyed, our finances ruined. The nation on the brink of destruction, and to save ourselves from it we needed money to feed soldiers, to erect fortresses, to furnish materials of war. We had to borrow, and we offered to the capitalists of Europe and asked to borrow. Our friends gave us money, although it was doubtful if we could pay it back, and the Democrats now intend to close them, and to repudiate our debts before the face of the world and before posterity as a country. Instead of those who helped it along in the time of its greatest distress, they want to be paid in greenbacks, according to Pendleton? Why, we have at present a circulation of about $600,000,000 in greenbacks, and gold stays at 135, so that each greenback is worth only 44 cents gold. Suppose we were to print $1,500,000,000 more, what then would be the value of the greenback? And further, suppose the holders of slavery and secession settled finally by the war, and they have no disposition to contribution to re-establish the one or thy grain the other.

Gentlemen, I am unanimous with, says Gen. Lee, of the Southern people, that we shall have lasting peace. They long for it. The people of the South have the greatest interest in having a good and stable government, that will protect them in their rights and their property, and under which they may go to work prosperously, and with the confidence that whatever they may accumulate by their labor will be secure for themselves and their children. They long for peace, and the peace measures emphatically the declarations of the Conservative Conventions of the South.

Gentlemen here like Judge Gobison, who have watched the progress of the darkness from its inception to its gratifying conclusion, are very hopeful that much good will result from its action.
