From Washington they were accompanied by four or five other men, who left them at French's saloon. Jean and his friend continued towards their lodging-house, and, as they turned a corner, two men, who had been following, came up to them. One of the men said: "I believe you are my men." At this moment two other men came up to where they were standing, one of whom carried in his hand a huge club. One Million Dollars of these Bonds. Either Coupon or Registered.

They stepped up to Jean, who, upon recognizing the person with the club as the man with whom he had a quarrel on the Saturday night previous, drew up his hand and slapped him in the face. whereupon he raised the club and struck Jean a crushing blow upon the head, felling him senseless to the ground. Willoby, Jean's friend, then started to run away, but was followed, overtaken, struck with the club, and knocked upon his back. The four men then started off in another direction.

Jean was pleked up and carried to the shanty, which is the term given the lodging-house, where he died at five o'clock Sunday morning. He remained unconscious, and did not speak after receiving the blow from the club, which crushed in his skull on the left side of the head.
