THE ROSECRANS FIASCO. General Roscrans, in his gushing artlessness, informs Robert E. Lee, and the rest of mankind, that he comes to the White Sulphur Springs "with my heart in my hand." If we understand the modern term "carnetbagger," it means a Northern politician who carries his valuables in his hand, as he goes down South on his mission of "honor and emolument." If this is the definition, are we to consider General Rosecrans a carpetbagger? Our Mexican Minister, arriving at a fashionable Southern watering place, with no baggage, save only his heart in his hand, must have been looked upon by that coterie of "brave, energetic and selfsacrificing men," before whom he humbled himself, as nothing better than a diplomatic Norton, O. Carpet-bagger. If he had even taken his Nye, J. W

Osborne, T. W... Patterson, D. T. head with him, it would not have been so bad; but to go traveling through Virginia, not only without his trunk, but without his brains; with nothing but a raw, bleeding, gushing heart in his hand, speaks very badly for his fitness for being allowed to go about alone. If Rosecrans means to go to the Court of Juarez, no better furnished than is Sausbury, W. Sawyer, F. A... hat he will stay at home.

Union, by fair means or foul, is put forward as a witness against the great soldier, who, more than all others, was successful in his efforts to overthrow the rebellion! This Onld, who would not hesitate to perjure himself to defend the reputation of the "Confederacy," is now relied upon by the Democrats as one of their strongest witnesses against Grant, and they try to make his unsupported evidence, stand in, the balance against some of the most patriotic and intelligent of our Union officers, who have repeatedly pronounced his statements a tissue of falsehoods from beginning to end. In this last effusion, he attempts to reply to a letter of Sullivan A. Meredith, "late Brigadier General and United States Commissioner of Exchange," published originally in the Buffalo Commercial Advertiser, and copied into other papers, which contained a defence of General Grant's course, in relation to the exchange of pilsonere. Ould, in speaking of General Meredith, uses the following complimentary and dignified language:

Considerable discussion has been going on here for several days in relation to the resignation of Assessor Gaddis, of Second District, Ohio. Gaddis, it seems, took an active part for Grant, and made campaign speeches, which offended His Misjesty at the White House, and the resignation of Gaddis was asked for. He immediately tendered it, and in doing so, made a lengthy statement, filling six pages, in which he arraigned the administration severely for its inconsistency and bad faith. This resignation was forwarded to the President, who instantly ordered its acceptance by appointing one Megrne, on the recommendation of Sam. Cairy, of Cincinnati, in whose district the office is lecated. A request was made for a copy of Gaddis's resignation for publication, but Secretary McCulloch refused to allew it to be published. It will see the light, however, in a few days, and will be found spley reading.

The fluctuations in Erie were from 46% to 47, and as a good deal of this stock is being absorbed by investors and other outside parties who believe in a much higher price for it ultimately, it shows considerable firmness, and, judged by all the other leading railway shares, it is undoubtedly the cheapest on the list. The Southern Situation.

The Long Branch correspondent of the New York Herald writes as follows concerning Gen.

Meade, who is sojourning there. The General's visit has nothing to do with the rumors which have been so rife of conferences or political matters. As he remarked, he never was a politician, and even now eschews everything likely or calculated to bring him into the vertex of following emphatic language: tician, and even now eschews everything likely or calculated to bring him into the vortex of politics. He however speaks unreservedly, of the sepect of affairs within his district, politically and socially. The people there look with great disfavor upon the course pursued by the radical democratic leaders. The Blair cry against the constitutionality of the reconstruction acts and the radical remedy he recommends should a Democratic President be elected finds no echo among the people of his district. The grievance they most loudly complain of is universal negro suffrage, and this arises principally from the fact that it places the control of the State governments virtually in the hands of the negroes and must disfranchise the whites should the former hostilely exercise their new rights. The people want peace and are willing to leave the vexed questions of the moment to the returning reason of their rulers. The General believes that Florida, Louisiana and South Carolina will vote the Republican ticket, while reduced to ashes."

But of this he has no apprehension whatever. The General looks to be in the enjoyment of excellent health, but nevertheless expects to be considerably benefited by the brief stay he allows himself at the Branch, aided by his temporary release from the cares of official life and the quiet enjoyment of the society of his amiable daughters.
