ON A BUST OF DANTE. BY THOMAS WILLIAM PARSONS See from this counterfeit of him Whom Arno shall remember long. How stern of lineament, how grim The father was of Tuscan song. Thero but the burning sense of wrong. Perpetual care and scorn ablds: Small friendship for the lerdly throng; Distrust of all the world beside. Faithful if this wan image be, No dream his life was—but a fight; Could any Beatrice see A lover in that anchorite? To that cold Ghibeline's gloomy sight Who could have guessed the visions came of Beanty, velled with heav'nly light, n clicles of elernal flame? The lips, as Cumae's cavern close, The checks, with fast and sorrow thin, The rigid front almost morose, But for the patient hope within, Declare a life whose course hath been Unsullied still, though still sovere, Which, through the wavering days of sin, Kept itself icy-chaste and clear. Not wholly such his haggard look When wandering once, forlorn, hestrayed, With no companion save his book, To Corro's husbed monastic shade: Where as the Benedictine laid His palm upon the pllgrim guest, The single boon for which he prayed

Or, when I speke of the betrothals of students, and the long duration of them, and of the fidelity of the betrothed to one another, another Frenchman remarked: "Out, plus ou moins." (Yes, more or less). In short, the funda-mental views and starting points of all thoughts and feelings were different; with the same words we referred to different things, and it was only our mutual good will and enthusiasm for German life that kept us to-gether; for Sardou perceived very clearly than more freshness and independence in the life of our German Youth than in that of France.
